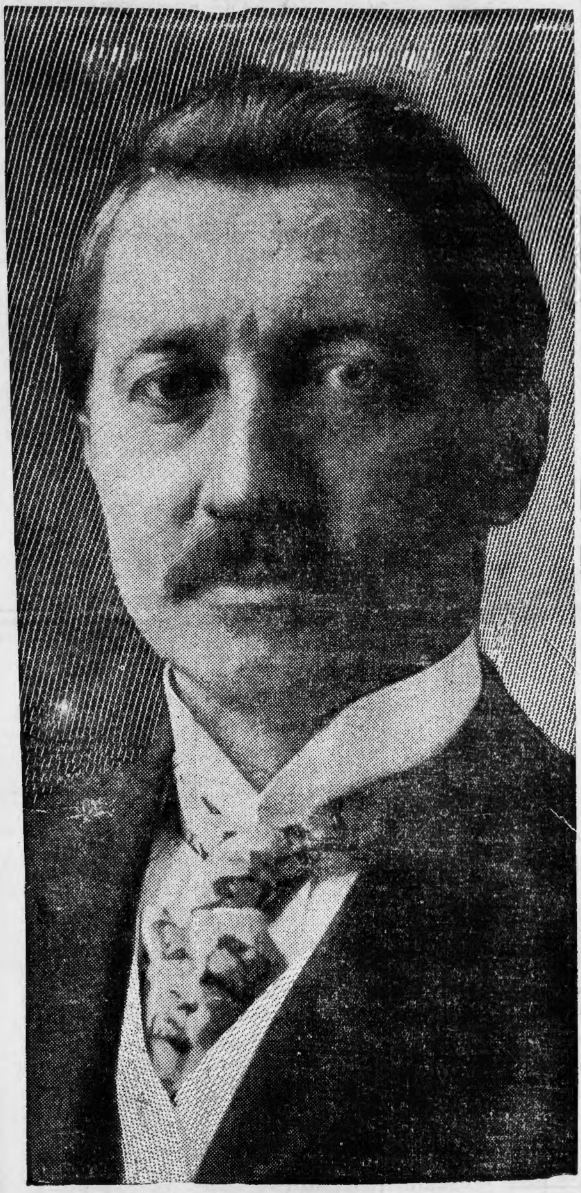
FREDERICK A. COOK,
Who Found North Pole



COOK CONFIRMS DISCOVERY

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—The following cablegram for Mrs. Frederick A. Cook was received at her home in Brooklyn to-day:

"Successful and well. Telegraph address to Copenhagen. (Signed) FRED."

This dispatch confirms the discovery of the North Pole by Dr. Cook. The message was forwarded to Mrs. Cook at South Harpswell Island, Casco Bay, Maine.

NORTH POLE FOUND!

COPENHAGEN, Sept. 1—Dr. Frederick A. Cook, the Brooklyn explorer, has reached the north pole and has returned safely across the ice floes to Lervik.

A dispatch was received here today from Lervik, addressed to the Colonial office and signed by Cook, in which the explorer gave the information that on April 21, 1908, he reached the pole and uncovered the mystery of the northernmost point of the earth's axis.

Dr. Cook for many months was believed to have perished in the ice of the frozen North, for nothing had been heard from him since March 17, 1908. At that time he had crossed Ellsmere Island, passed Hansen Strait, and had reached the ice near Cape Hubbard, sixty miles below Cape Columbus, Peary's point of departure in his expedition of 1906. He was then well, and expected to be heard from again in three months. More than a year passed without further word from him.

The dispatch from Lervik gives no details of what trials and hardships the explorer and his companions had to withstand.

Cook Not Accompanied by White Men.

No white man accompanied Dr. Cook. He set out on the dash to the Pole with eight Esquimaux, twelve teams of dogs and four sleds. A minimum of impedimenta was used. Cook's expedition was the most sensational ever carried out by an explorer. He carried an automobile sled that made high speed over the ice and that became a mere boat when open water was struck.

The news of the discovery of the Pole created the greatest excitement here, which will, without doubt, spread the world over. Among scientists here who have watched for years the many expeditions set out to find the Pole and plant the flag of one nation or another where the foot of human has never touched, the greatest enthusiasm exists over the report of final victory, and the highest of praise is being sounded for the wonderfully plucky American.

Explorer Long in North.

That Cook escaped with his life after his two years' fight for this proud achievement is considered little short of marvellous. Even while the Peary relief expedition was hunting for him in the ice and mountans of frozen snow beyond the end of land he is believed to have been at the Pole making hurried observations for the scientists the world over. The last word from the explorer was received in May of last year.

It was a letter to his son Frank, telling him to return to New York. He was then in Western Ellsmere Land, about sixty miles southwest of Cape Columbia, the northernmost porton of the Arctic mainland. The return of Frank Cook was accomplished by great hardships, which gave rise to fears that the father would never be seen alive again. It was Dr. Cook's plan to make his base of supplies, or permanent camp, at Annatoak, in Greenland, about twenty miles north of Etah and about 1,000 miles from the North Pole. He left there in December, 1907, and then made his way westward out of the Bache Peninsula and across to Ellsmere Land. It is believed he reached this in Febraury, 1908.

Left Only White Man Behind.

When Dr. Cook started he left behind at Annatoak the only remaining white man in his party, Rudolph Francke, a young German. Francke had bten told by the explorer to wait at Winter quarters until he heard from him, and when he did hear to obey instructions literally. On May 7, 1908, Francke received a message from Dr. Cook telling him to go back to New York if he did not return to Annatoak by early June. This was the March 17 letter and must have been written two weeks after the start poleward. June came and went and Dr. Cook did not return. Francke therefore obeyed and started South. He made a long detour to North Star Bay in Greenland in the hope of meeting the whalers. On the way he became afflicted with scurvy and rheumatism and had to crawl over the ice. The whalers had gone from North Star, and Francke, with a few Esquimos, started back to Etah. At Etah Francke, in terrible condition, was picked up by Peary's auxiliary cruiser the Erik.

He has improvised crutches cut of two sticks and had been living on walrus meat, which the natives gave to him and to their dogs alike. He was taken to Nova Scotia and from there found his way back to New York.

WONDERFUL STORY OF COOK'S VOYAGE

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—Frederick O. Cook, the Brooklyn explorer, has reached the North Pole. Such is the news received this afternoon by the members of the club which financed his expedition into the Arctic wilderness. An American has planted Old Glory on the top of the world.

The news will cause a thrill of pride in every American heart. For ages men of all nations have sought this goal. Americans have ever been foremost in this quest of such vast importance to science. Hundreds of men have lost their lives in the unknown North. Millions of treasure have been expended.

It has cost the life of the daring Andree, who attempted to get there with a balloon and never was heard of after disappearing into the northern mists of the coast of Norway. Only a fortnight ago a similar attempt with a dirigible had to be abandoned.

It has been known for weeks that Cook was nearer the Pole than any other man had ever reached and his success is not a surprise to those who know the man and are familiar with the plans which were so carefully prepared.

Anthony Fiala only yesterday said he expected to hear hourly that the American flag had not only been carried "farthest North," the expression hitherto used, but placed on the very throne of the North King himself.

"Cook will discover the Pole," he has repeated over and over to all his friends.

No word was received from Cook since March 17 last. He was then on the Polar ice north of Cape Thomas Hubbard, about 360 miles from the Pole. He was the only white man, with several Esquimaux and a big equipment of dogs, sleds and supplies. When he wrote then he was on the eve of making a desperate dash for the Pole over the ice.

Dr. Cook's wife and two children live at No. 670 Bushwick avenue, Brooklyn. Mrs. Cook has never been alarmed about her

MINOT ADMITS TAX STORY BY FITZGERALD

Laurence Minot, president of the Good Government Association, to-day admitted that former Mayor John F. Fitzgerald told the truth when he charged that Mr. Minot is to pay nine times as much in taxes this year as he did in past years. But Mr. Minot denies that he is a tax-dodger or a grafter, as charged in speeches by former Mayor Fitzgerald.

Mr. Minot says that in the past the assessors only asked him a few questions about how much property he owned, but that this year Secretary Charles E. Folsom of the Board of Assessors asked about nine times as many questions as his predecessors, and thus found that Mr. Minot should pay about nine times the amount of taxes into the city treasury that he did last year. Said Mr. Minot to-day:

"The tax figures as given by Mr. Fitzgerald are true—that is, in the main. I haven't verified them, but I am to pay this year a much larger tax as trustee and executor than before. But I will not enter into a discussion with Mr. Fitzgerald on the matter or make any reply to what he says.

All Credit to Assessor.

"No, I don't consider that it is graft, just because in other years lower taxes were assessed than in a current year."

"How came it that your taxes were increased this year—was it a voluntary act on your part to have them increased, or did the assessors find property this year that escaped them before?" the reporter asked the head of the Good Government Association.

"Well, it came about in this way," replied Mr. Minot. "Secretary Folsom of the Board of Assessors came over and questioned me on my holdings as trustee, executor and guardian, and I gave him all the information he asked for. Upon what I stated the assessors made the assessment."

"And in other years, Mr. Minot, how was the assessment made?"

"Well, questions were answered just the same, as put by the assessors. This year, however, Mr. Folsom went into detail more than in other years.

"No, I can't see where any graft comes in at all in the transactions. I gave the assessors all the information they requested and they made the assessments."

Fitzgerald's Attack.

"I'll make no reply to Mr. Fitzgerald."

Mr. Fitzgerald first attacked Mr. Minot last Saturday at the Cleveland Club outing, and he repeated the attack last night, giving the figures to back up his statements. Mr. Fitzgerald said:

"Last Saturday I charged that Laurence Minot of the Good Government Association was guilty of tax dodging. Mr. Minot replied that my statement was untrue. A glance at the accompanying figures will show who is telling the truth.

"The following figures, taken from the books of the assessing department, give the amount assessed on personal property held by Mr. Minot individually and as trustee, executor or guardian, together with the amount of taxes paid and to be paid this year:

	Assesed val. of personal property.	Amount of taxes on pers. estate.
1906	$54,600.00	$868.14
1907	58,300.00	928.97
1908	64,000.00	1,056.00
1909	605,000.00	9,997.35

WORLD'S GREATEST PACING CLASSIC AT READVILLE TO-DAY

The biggest pacing event of the world is decided at Readville to-day in the pacing division of the American Derby, worth $15,000. Never before have the side-wheelers taken the word for a prize valued at more than $10,000, while classics like the Chamber of Commerce at Detroit are counted rich at $5,000.

With the returning of the victor in the trotting end of the Derby some of the horse lovers have concluded the star attraction of the present Grand Circuit has already become a matter of history, but in the battle of the country's best pacers to-day there is every likelihood that those at the track will see a notch made in the hall of turf fame that will be remembered and talked about in years to come.

In the first place, there is the Canadian wonder The Eel, that gray stallion no pacer in the country has a hinge on in giving him a beating on even terms.

The Eel Wears Hopples.

In this case he starts at the scratch. It surely will be a startling sight when he turns loose and goes after the horses with the handicaps in front of him. Sanguine horsemen, who have followed the stallion, aver he will have overtaken the most of his field when a half mile of the distance is passed.

The Eel, as everybody knows, wears the hopples when out for the game. He goes away from the word like a rifle shot out of a cannon, and unlike some of the leg-wearing sand sifters, is credited with endurance to carry his terrific clip for a long distance.

The question arises with some of the experts whether after having probably caught his leaders, with all the electric flight of speed in doing this, can he then continue along the entire mile Derby distance and finish in the van?

It is a common knowledge of pacers that they have in a mile race only a single burst of speed, rated at an eighth up to a quarter of a mile. Catching his field means that The Eel must use that vast amount of speed in the early stages of the big race.

The pacing Derby to-day will settle the true merits of gameness and extensive brushing ability in this tribe of horses.

Scratched The Philistine.

The general talk about the track in days past has been how the strongest factor opposing The Eel was The Philistine. While a three-year-old colt, yet the fact of his being handicapped on the 2:14 mark, and then of having been a trial in 2:06½, accomplished so easily that good observers conceded him good for a trip right in 2:04, it will be learned with disappointment how he came down with an attack of distemper Monday. Last night he was so sick there was no chance of his facing the starter.

However, in no way does the withdrawal of The Philistine hinder Asa Wilkes from doing himself credit. Claims have been heard that he can turn Readville in 2:05 and the next half in the same rate of speed. This means that the scratch horse must travel the Derby distance in 3:07½, if both started together, but with Asa Wilkes having 180 feet the start of The Eel, and that shorter distance to go, the entry from the Western part of Massachusetts should be capable of landing in 3:05.

It is this figuring that has made Asa Wilkes the choice with the betting men about town. At the hotels the bookies are offering 4 to 1 against Asa Wilkes and this is a slight margin over The Eel, who was quoted at odds of 9 to 2. From the betting done, however, it is shown how Asa Wilkes will go to the post the favorite.

It won't do to leave out Baron Whips in Tommy Murphy's string. In his last workout he marched the Derby distance in 3:12, and the final quarter was clocked in just 30 seconds. While this speed cannot win the pacing Derby, yet his margin is good enough so none of the starters can take a chance in attempting to lay back of him with the thought of beating him on the last brush to the wire.

A few private reports circulated in select quarters tell how the Lehman stable from Cincinnati started Carrie S. in the 2:11 pace Tuesday simply for a good workout to help her in to-day's event. It must be borne in mind that the handicap places her on the 2:14 mark, nine seconds, or 405 feet in advance of The Eel and 135 feet ahead of Asa Wilkes. Odds on Carrie S. are 7 to 1 to win, and 4 to 1 for place and 2 to 1 she doesn't show.

Bard Allerton, owned by Hart Litchfield of Somerville and driven by Cox Combination Park, is getting quite a nibbling of betting. This is more than he would have got from the bookies were it not for the fact that he has gone off since his victorious campaign through the Provinces.

Ten fleet-footed equines are in the 2:16 trot and the person capable of picking the winner has fairly earned the right to secure a license for telling fortunes. There is the local stallion, King Peter; Dena, a Canadian trotter that last season never lost a trick, and Albert V., which the residents of the city of Hartford are willing to back for almost any amount.

Beatrice Bellini, by all kinds of dope obtainable, will go to the post an overwhelming favorite in the 2:09 trot, while Carroll, the Cleveland trotter, if just to a point in condition, should connect with quite a tidy sum, if not first.

GLIDDEN TRYING FOR HIGH BALLOON MARK

FITCHBURG, Sept. 1.—If wind and weather conditions are right, Charles J. Glidden of Boston will try to reach the highest elevation ever attained in the United States during his aerial flight in the large balloon Massachusetts, from the Fitchburg Aero park to-day.

In the basket with Mr. Glidden, who will act as pilot, will be John J. Valkenburgh of South Framingham, Jay B. Benton of Boston, and possibly Professor H. Helm Clayton of the Blue Hill Observatory. An ascension will be made at 4 p. m., and if the wind favors, an attempt may be made to reach Canada.

Should the wind prove to be in the direction of the Atlantic ocean or Long Island sound, however, an attempt will be made to reach the highest elevation ever attained by a balloon in this country.

ALARM CLOCK 50c

TRACE ARTIST EARLE TO EUROPE; GIRL FROM BOSTON ALSO SAILED

Ferdinand Phinney Earle, best known in "artistically temperamental" circles as "the original affinity," because of his abandonment of his wife and child for his "soul mate," Miss Julia Kutner, is believed by his New York friends to be in Paris now. They declare that he made the voyage over in company with a Boston young woman, Miss Gertrude Buell Dunn, whom he calls his "mental mate." There are others in the party, including a chaperon.

D. Russell Herts, editor of the radical magazine "Moods," and a close friend of Artist Earle, is authority for this information. Editor Herts said in New York:

"If publicity must be given, I am quite sure that Earle would prefer me to be the authoritative source."

But Ballard Dunn, brother of Gertrude Dunn, and city editor of a Chicago afternoon paper, vigorously denied in Chicago to-day that his sister is with Earle. He says:

"I received a communication from her to-day saying she was in Paris alone and that she would sail for New York alone about September 4. This is sufficient assurance to me that the story is not true. About three weeks ago I was in New York and I heard that she had gone to Monroe to see Mr. Earle in regard to the establishment of an orphan's school. My sister is connected with a social settlement on upper Broadway.

Miss Dunn Literary.

"In her work she frequently has been in the homes of Socialists and thus met Mr. Earle. I was a little concerned when I learned she had gone to see him and went to Monroe, but I found things all right."

Miss Dunn, who has made Boston her home for some time, is a writer, artist and horsewoman, came into national prominence when President Roosevelt visited Denver in June, 1905.

On one occasion the President and his party took a horseback ride over the mountains. A number of photographs were taken of the calvacade. In some of them Miss Dunn was shown riding astride. As soon as the President saw the pictures he instructed Secretary Loeb to order the negative and prints destroyed.

So quietly did Earle and his "Mental mate" depart on their tour abroad, that the friends of both did not learn of their sailing, which was on July 25, until yesterday.

Miss Dunn, Earle asserts, is of a feminine type absolutely opposite to the character of his famous affinity Julia Kuttner, who is now suing to annul their marriage. His present comrade, he says, is no more to him than a "mentality." Julia Kuttner, on the contrary, attracted him by her physical charms.

"I became interested in Miss Dunn" said the painter just before he sailed, "because of the magnetism of her mind. And she, too, was drawn to me by my mental powers. Our bodies, as it were, vanish into space."

Famous as Horseman.

Before meeting Ferdinand Pinney Earle, Miss Dunn had become famous in the West for physical as well as mental achievements. She not only wrote viridly phrased magazine stories, but she still further astonished her quieter neighbors by feats of horsemanship.

She was especially fond of riding astride in mannish costume. Frequently she would dash through the streets in cowboy costume or across country at breakneck speed.

The mental mateship of Artist Earle and Miss Dunn began last June in a barn which Charles O. Haag, the Scandinavian sculptor, utilizes as a studio in Summer. It is situated in Silvermine avenue, Norwalk Ct.

The painter had gone to Norwalk to paint a picture of Mrs. Rose Pastor Stokes, wife of the young millionaire Socialist. Both Mr. and Mrs. Stokes had chanced to meet Earle at Socialistic meetings, and on being invited to view his work in portraiture had been impressed by it.

Earle not only had known Haag, but he had assisted him before in a business way. He called and found at the barn-like studio a young woman, who, as she afterward said, "At once enthralled my mind." She was introduced as Miss Gertrude Buell Dunn, a fellow-artist, who was assisting the sculptor in various classic studies.

At the moment Earle entered the workshop the young woman was said to be posing for a "headless victory."

"And yet, despite the theme which she then personified, as the painter later expressed it, "it was her head, her mind, that triumphed."

It is said that all three talked, while the sculptor worked. Earle was in a philosophical mood, and he discussed at great length his own peculiar ideas of life. And almost at every period the young woman on the model block would answer:

"Yes, indeed. Only too true."

Thoughts Were the Same.

And thereupon she would pick up the thread of the conversation, adding thoughts to which the painter, as in a trance, would reply:

"Just what I have thought all these years, but never was able to express."

Artist Earle called again at the barn studio. Each day his visits grew longer, until at last Sculptor Haag suddenly exclaimed:

"This talking must stop—or I will stop my work. All this philosophy has completely upset me. Instead of the classics, we are discussing Socialism, political economy and a lot of other new fangled things. Mr. Earle, you are welcome here, but you must stop talking."

In an instant the "headless Victory model" asserted herself.

"If Mr. Earle cannot be allowed to converse with me I shall leave this studio."

There was a great deal said very rapidly by all three, with the result that the classic model took the first train for New York city, the sculptor smashed his half-finished statue, and the painter sat down and wrote a poem on "The Soul."

Before Miss Dunn left Norwalk she had received an invitation from Earle to visit him at his castle-like home, on the mountain, near Monroe, Orange county, New York.

"I think you understand my ideals of art better than any man or woman I have met," he said. "I wish you would look at my paintings and tell me how you think I can do nobler work."

It was agreed that Miss Dunn should bring out to Monroe a little colony of children. Their parents were to come, too. Earle gave orders to the servants to turn his drawing rooms into a great playroom. Bedrooms never used before were equipped with new furniture. Everything was made ready for the children.

Brother Disturbs Quiet.

The little ones came and with them Miss Dunn and Miss Laura M. Gildner, her chum. For a time the career of philanthrophy moved happily. The children romped up and down the mountain and the mothers grew happy and contented.

Then, suddenly, a young man appeared at the door of the mansion. He stated that he was Ballard Dunn, a brother of Miss Gertrude. He asked her to come out of the house and talk with him. He said he had read so much about Earle in the newspapers about his putting aside his wife for Julia Kuttner, whom he proclaimed to the world as his "affinity" that he had come from Chicago to see things for himself.

The sister protested that she and Earle attracted each other only mentally. She said she was there in his home simply because she was interested in the same ideals and ambition as he.

Night came and brother and sister, out on the top of the mountain, still argued. At midnight, the brother was still unconvinced. It was not until 4 o'clock the next morning that he turned to his sister with the words:

"Gertrude, I believe that you will always be the same pure, sweet girl. Good bye. I trust to you."

But rumors began to go around Monroe, passed on by one village gossip to another. At last they came to the ears of the artist.

"In truth, I have only now come to realize what mental woman is. I have begun a new life, one that is wholly pure and noble."

But the tongues of the rural folk only wagged faster. Some of the stories even came to the parents of the children, and they asked if they might return to the slums.

Affinity Fights Divorce.

At the same time Mrs. Julia Kuttner Earle, whom he had espoused as his "soul mate," and in whom he said at the time he had found the "true joy of living," pressed her action for the annulment of their marriage.

Her grounds were that Earle had never obtained a divorce from his first wife in the French courts. Some of the town folk also, who believed that Miss Dunn did not know all about Earle, told her of his many fantastic actions in the past.

They pointed that he unconventionally announced to the world that Miss Kuttner was his affinity even while she was living in the same house with himself and wife.

They recalled the new wife's later accusations of cruelty, in which she charged him with beating her, throwing dishes and furniture at her and acting like a madman.

They spoke of his incarceration in the county jail, his retreat to a sanitarium and other things of as unusual a nature. To all of which Miss Dunn is said to have answered:

"The poor man was not to blame. He never before met a mind that could act in harmony with his. He was dying for sympathy, but none could give it."

But just as one of the Monroe clergymen was about to call upon Miss Dunn to learn how true a convert she had made of the eccentric artist, the Earle home was suddenly deserted.

The painter and his companion had fled. Yesterday it was learned that they had sailed for Europe on July 25, and at the present time are believed to be in Paris.

RUSH HELP TO 500 VICTIMS IN NEVADA FLOOD

RENO, Nev., Sept. 1.—Special trains laden with food, clothing, medicine and other supplies were rushed to Rawhide today for the relief of the sufferers in the cloudburst which wiped away nearly half the town, killing several persons.

A wall of water twelve feet high washed down the canyon leading to the city. The flood came without warning and all were caught unawares. Five hundred persons are homeless and rescuers are working hard to relieve the suffering.

The storm ceased as suddenly as it began and relief work was commenced immediately. Mabel Lawrence of Stingaree Gulch was dug from beneath a pile of mud and debris, and other similar rescues were made.

Many Thrilling Rescues.

In all close to 150 business buildings, huts and homes have been destroyed. The course of the flood was down Rawhide avenue, directly through the business section. On one side is the residence section, while to the south is the red light district. The buildings were torn from their foundations and carried on the crest of the wave, which was not less than twelve feet in height.

The Proskey lease on Grutt Hill was in the path of the flood. The miners at work in the drifts were caught in a trap, and it was only by a miracle that they were able to make their way along ladders to the surface. Women were pulled from the roofs of houses as they were being swept along to destruction. Others, to avoid being dashed to death, leaped from their temporary life rafts out of the stream and toward the mountain side, to be pulled to safety by the rescue parties which had already lined the path of the sweeping waters.

Woman Leads Workers.

Mrs. Lillian Hall, one of the pioneer women of the camp, led one of the rescue parties and to-day is doing service in one of the temporary hospitals along the path of the flood.

Among the heaviest losers are Tex Rickard, the Tonopah Lumber Company, Rawhide Telephone Company, Johnson & Riley, Cal Dunneng, Grutt Brothers, Proskey Brothers, and Nat C. Goodwin Company.

The loss is estimated at about $110,000. Immediately help was asked from Reno and Goldfield, and preparations for special trains went forward all night. This is the second disaster in Rawhide in the two years of its existence. Last September a fire nearly wiped out the place.

Nat Goodwin's extensive mines are in the flood district.

COULDN'T RENT 1313, NUMBER IS SHIFTED

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1.—A real estate firm of this city has changed the number of a house on M street from 1313 to No. 1311½. It is explained that many people who looked through the house objected to the number 1313 even though they found everything to their satisfaction. The house rents for $1,300 a year. On Thirteenth street, No. 1313 recently celebrated its thirteenth anniversary of vacancy.

CHURCH COLLAPSES, FORTY IN THE RUINS

MADRID, Sept. 1.—Forty persons were buried to-day, when a portion of the Catholic church at Caicedo collapsed. It is reported that many of them were badly hurt and that some of them will die from their wounds. The congregation was praying when the crash came.

HER BABY BOY A MASS OF ERUPTION

Pimply Rash Spread Until Head, Face and Body were Covered with Eczema — Hands Bandaged to Keep from Scratching — Was a Fearful Sight and Defied Cure.

CUTICURA MADE SKIN CLEAR AND HEALTHY

"My baby's eczema came on when he was three months old, like a rash on his face and then spread over his head. Then there began to form a lot of small pimples over his head from which a watery substance came out and formed a regular mass of crust all over his head, face and body. I had to tie woolen cloths on his hands to keep him from scratching himself. He was a fearful sight to look at. I went to a drug store and tried some of their remedies for eczema but they did not do him any good. I then called in one of our leading physicians and he tried several kinds of medicine and gave me prescriptions, but they only made him worse.

"At this stage a lady friend of mine came in and advised me to try the Cuticura Remedies. That afternoon I sent for a cake of Cuticura Soap, a box of Cuticura Ointment and one vial of Cuticura Pills, and in less than a week I could see a vast improvement in him. I washed him all over every morning with the Cuticura Soap and gave him an application of the Cuticura Ointment after his bath. I kept on using the Cuticura Remedies until he was completely cured. They left his skin clear and healthy and I always have kept the Cuticura Remedies in the house ever since. I highly recommend Cuticura to all persons suffering from eczema. Mrs. Kate Brougham, 200 Dewey St., Bennington, Vt., Dec. 5, 1908 and Jan. 17, 1909."

PIMPLES CURED

"I congratulate Cuticura upon my speedy recovery from pimples which covered my face. I used Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent for ten days and my face cleared and I am perfectly well. I had tried doctors for several months but got no results. Wm. J. Sadlier, 1614 Susquehanna Ave., Philadelphia, Pa., May 1, 1909."

Cuticura Soap (25c.), Cuticura Ointment (50c.) and Cuticura Resolvent (50c.), (or in the form of Chocolate Coated Pills, 25c. per vial of 60) are sold throughout the world. Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Sole Props., 135 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass.

TAFT CLERKS ON FISHLESS TRIP AT SEA

BEVERLY, Sept. 1.—When Secretary Carpenter reached the executive offices to-day he found the entire force on hand ready for work. As the Secretary had given them all a holiday, it was rather a surprise. They grinned at him sheepishly and then Assistant Secretary Foster explained: "We did not go."

This was to have been the day of the great fishing trip. Ever since the President arrived the clerks in the executive offices have been planning to pull in some large and game fish.

They heard of a man in Salem who took out fishing parties and sent one of the local newspaper men over to arrange matters with him. It was decided to start for the deep sea fishing grounds at 11 last night. On reaching the vessel all hands were to turn in and sleep until dawn—all except the skipper. When they awoke they would find themselves on the fishing grounds, and would remain there until noon.

Plenty of Bait.

Last night was a beautiful, mild evening. At 10:30 two big automobiles conveyed the party over to Salem. There were Foster and Smithers and Hall and Hinman and Adams and Stanton. They carried with them many overcoats, oilskins and hampers filled with sandwiches, cake, pie and other eatables. As they reached Salem before 11, they were able to lay in a large store of liquid bait. The skipper of the sloop Flying Cloud, who talked like one of "Jim" Connolly's fishermen, impressed the Washingtonians.

"There's a pretty stiff gale outside, but I guess you fellows can stand it all right," said the skipper.

"Sure," replied the Washingtonians.

"Well boys, turn in."

Six hours are supposed to elapse here.

The fishermen yawned and rubbed their eyes to find daylight streaming through the cabin hatchway.

"Wake up," cried Assistant Secretary Foster.

There's a Reason.

And then they struggled into their clothes. Ample bait was supplied and they began to arrange their tubs to trawl.

Smithers climbed into a suit of oilskins too small for him and poked his head up the hatchway. He gave a yell of surprise and rage.

"Come up here, fellows, and see the fishing grounds."

The amateur fishermen fell all over each other getting on deck. On one side stretched the ocean with the Jubilee Yacht Club in the middle distance. On the other was the wharf at Salem. The skipper sat by the wheel, smoking his pipe.

"It's too rough outside, fellows, so I didn't take you out," he said.

So the executive clerks were at work to-day.

Cobb Sees President.

Congressman Gardner, discussing the Republican insurgents in the House, said to-day that he personally favored Walter I. Smith of Iowa as candidate for Spe[illegible]er against Speaker Cannon.

John C. Cobb of the Boston Chambe. of Commerce saw President Taft to-day. He was the manager of the Taft boom in Massachusetts and has been mentioned for a place on the board of tariff experts.

Postmaster General Hitchcock and Director of the Census E. Dana Durand called upon the President this afternoon. It is reported that S. N. D. North, who has been mentioned for a place on the board of tariff experts, has been turned down by the administration.

PLUCKY YOUTH STOPS RUNAWAY

DEDHAM, Sept. 1.—John Boyle O'Reilly, fourt[illegible]year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. P. F. O'Reilly of No. 67 Harvard street, stopped a runaway horse, though the frightened animal drew him a mile or more through the business centre of the town. The boy's knee was slightly hurt. Prior to the time the boy clambered on board the vehicle by the way of the tailboard Dennis Haley, employed on the estate of George C. Lee, Jr., brother-in-law of former President Roosevelt, had been thrown from the wagon and suffered injuries to his leg and arm.

ADMIRAL EATON AND WIFE RECONCILED BY EFFORTS OF DAUGHTER

DOROTHY AINSWORTH—

Dorothy Ainsworth, who reunited mother and stepfather after death of their adopted baby.

The family of Rear Admiral Joseph Giles Eaton, United States Navy (retired), is once more united at the Eaton farm in Assinippi, near Hanover. Mrs. Eaton, whose sensational charges that their adopted infant, Joseph Giles Eaton, Jr., died of poison, disrupted the family ten days ago, is living with her husband again apparently as though nothing had happened. Her two daughters, June and Dorothy Ainsworth, children by her first marriage, are also with their mother and stepfather at Assinippi.

There is an entire change of attitude in the family regarding speaking about its affairs. Instead of the long and conflicting statements given to the newspapers after Mrs. Eaton made her charges that the babe was poisoned, both the Admiral and his wife are maintaining close secrecy.

"I have nothing to say," declares the Admiral. "There has been too much said about our family differences already."

It is thought, however, that whatever reconciliation has been effected, is due in great part to the efforts of the younger daughter, Dorothy Ainsworth. She was the Admiral's favorite and was probably the person best fitted to bring her mother and step-father together again. The Admiral loved her fondly. Only last Saturday, when his mind was torn with conflicting emotions, he said of Dorothy:

"Dorothy is my girl, my chum. She is a wise and well-balanced child. She is mature beyond her years. She could enter into my hopes and plans. I have educated her. Only last night (Friday) I received an affectionate letter from her, saying, 'Cheer up, Papa. I still love you.'"

Had Talked Divorce.

Since Mrs. Eaton's charges became public last week the Admiral has been living alone at Assinippi. Mrs. Eaton and her daughters stayed at the Isis Cottage, North Scituate Beach. It was at this cottage that the baby died on July 21. It was there also that Mrs. Eaton made her sensational declarations concerning the manner of the infant's death. From Assinippi farm the Admiral made his replies to the charges of his wife.

There was no prospect, so far as the public knew up to last night, that the Admiral and his family would be reunited again. The talk was more of divorce than anything else. The viscera of the dead child had been sent to Professor Whitney of the Harvard Medical School for examination. Samples of the patent food which had been prepared for the infant just prior to his death had been sent to Medical Examiner J. Winthrop Spooner of Hingham. These were being examined for traces of poison.

Reports on these examinations were awaited with much interest by those following the case. Admiral Eaton had been quoted as saying that as soon as the examinations disproved the charges of poison he would institute proceedings for divorce.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Eaton's former husband, D. H. Ainsworth of Boston, had called at [illegible] Isis Cottage and had consulted with [illegible] woman who had divorced him just be[illegible]re she married the Admiral. This was regarded as another indication that the breach between the Admiral and Mrs. Eaton was becoming hopeless.

Returns to Husband.

Suddenly the entire situation has changed completely. Last night Mrs. Eaton and June and Dorothy Ainsworth went to Assinippi and were received by Admiral Eaton at his farm. So far as all outward appearance went the mother and daughters might have been returning from a vacation trip.

Early in July the Eaton family went to the Isis cottage, where their five months' old baby died on July 20. It came out that the child was an adopted one. Mrs. Eaton and her elder daughter were arraigned against the Admiral, with Dorothy taking his side.

Attorney J. Arnold Farrer said to-day:

"I represent Mrs. Eaton and advised her to have an autopsy on the body of her child. She made no legal step against her husband at any time, nor did I advise her to institute legal proceedings. The matter has ended the way it naturally would by the reconciliation of the couple."

ESCAPED 3 YEARS AGO; IS RECAPTURED

BRISTOL, Ct., Sept. 1.—"Jack" Wilkinson, who made his escape from the police station at Albany, N. Y., in September, 1906, where he was held in connection with the murder of John E. Capron, was captured here by Chief Belden, a local officer and a detective from Albany. Wilkinson is said to have admitted his identity, but denied connection with the crime. He expressed a willingness to return without extradition.

MAYOR BROOKS OF CAMBRIDGE WEDS CLERK

Mayor William F. Brooks of Cambridge and Miss Jessie I. R. Waterman of Cambridgeport were married to-day by the Rev. Fr. Coughlan in the rectory of the Sacred Heart Church, Watertown. Owing to the recent death of the Mayor's father, the ceremony was very quiet, only a few friends of the bride and groom being present. James Conley, Mayor Brook's partner in the real estate business, was best man, and Miss Edith Bradbury attended the bride. After a wedding trip to New York and Washington, Mayor and Mrs. Brooks will live at the Park Chambers, Lake street, Cambridgeport.

The wedding is the climax of a romance which began several years ago, when the Mayor was chief assessor and Miss Waterman was chief clerk in the assessors' office. Since then the Mayor had been attentive to Miss Waterman, but only intimate friends knew of the plans for the wedding.

Miss Waterman is a Cambridge girl and graduate from the Cambridge Latin School in 1893. She entered the assessors' office after graduation, where her expertness attracted the atention of Mayor Brooks. Two years ago she resigned and entered the Department of Adult Poor in the State House, remaining there until two months ago.

Mayor Brooks was born in Cambridge, January 27, 1865. He served in the Common Council for three years, 1896 to 1889, in the Aldermen in 1900 and 1901 and was chairman of the Board of Assessors from 1903 to 1905. He then retired to give more attention to his real estate business and remained out of public life until last March, when he became Mayor.

DETECTIVE KILLS 2 MARINE STRIKERS

BUFFALO, N. Y., Sept. 1.—John C. Nicolai, a private detective, employed by the Lake Carriers' Association, shot and killed two marine strikers on the West Shore docks. He was only saved from lynching by the arrival of policemen.

Nicolai was in charge of two strike breakers when George Houghton, a fireman, and Matthew Dwyer, an oiler, both strikers, who had been acting as pickets about the docks held him up. When they started in to attack him, Nicolai drew a revolver and fired twice, a man dropping at each shot. Both were instantly killed.

CARASA MAKES DEBUT IN "AIDA"

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—Frederico Carasa, a young Spaniard, who by many has been acclaimed Caruso's rival as the leading operatic tenor, made his first appearance in America at the Manhattan Opera House in "Aida."

Carasa's voice proved fresh and delightful in tonal quality and he sang with fine expression. As Radames, he displayed a fine stage presence and much histrionic ability.

Mme. Alice Baron, an American, was the Aida, and her artistic work won for her several encores.

TO SPEND $800,000 REPAIRING MAINE

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., Sept. 1.—The U. S. S. Maine, which was put out of commission recently, is at the local navy yard for repairs. Three years will be required to put the ship in first-class condition. Congress appropriated $800,000 for the work. The crew of the ship were last night transferred to the U. S. S. Prairie and sent to the League Island Navy Yard, Philadelphia, where they will be transferred to the battleships Michigan and North Carolina.

20,000 COAL MINERS STRIKE ON POWDER

PITTSBURG, Sept. 1.—Unsanctioned either by National President Lewis or the national executive board of the United Mine Workers of America, 20,000 miners went on strike in the Pittsburg district to-day. District leaders decreed the strike after a two days' conference with the mine operators over the use of black powder, the new explosive ordered by the State, in mining coal.

CROWDS CUT BREAKFAST TO WATCH AUTOS

By J. C. KERRISON.

LOWELL, Sept. 1.—A speed of eighty-five and ninety miles an hour was attained by several of the cars in the practice work this morning, and 2,000 or more at the course before 5 o'clock saw something in the line of thrillers.

At the "Dip of Death," the "Hairpin Turn" and the "Double S" turn, the three most dangerous points on the course, there was something doing in the line of speed.

The work this morning shows conclusively that the cars and men are in the best condition, and that Lowell will have the greatest motor racing this country has ever known. The entry list, including no less than forty-two cars, embraces the best-known American and foreign drivers.

Crowds Go Breakfastless.

Although known officially as national races, the events are unquestionably international, as the representative foreign cars are entered. It was the training work of this morning that brought forth the crowds and held them breakfastless until the practice spins ceased.

The work was decidedly spirited and interesting. Grant in the Alco, Dingley in the Chalmers, Lyttle in the Apperson and Stoecker in the Benz divided the speed honors of the day, repeatedly going up the stretch at eighty or mor emiles an hour.

Matson, who keenly feels the misfortune of yesterday, was out, but did not try very fast work. He said he felt not like driving to the limit, but still he showed pretty good work.

The Maxwell mosquito fleet of three cars clocked lap after lap in fifteen and sixteen minutes, taking the turns fairly easily and occasionally jumping down the straightaway, with the speed of the little mosquito. These three cars will be heard from during the first day of the races.

Joe Coffey in the Columbia was early on the scene and did four laps between twelve and thirteen minutes respectively. Herb Lyttle in the Apperson Jack Rabbit on one lap showed a speed of eighty-five miles an hour, which is certainly going some, while Dingley in the Chalmers made two laps in twenty-five minutes, an average of pretty close to fifty miles an hour.

Lorimer in the Chalmers, and, in fact, the entire Chalmers camp showed that they are to be looked upon as most dangerous men in the final reckoning. Davis, who is to drive a Moon car, made several circuits of the course with a stock runabout, but he was content to plug along nice and easy.

Chevorlet "Got Wise."

Chevorlet, the winner of the Cobe trophy race, and Burman, another speed merchant turned out for work this morning on the Buick cars they were both given a hearty welcome. Chevorlet, the daring, rather looked with scorn on the "Hairpin Turn," but the second time around he discovered that there was "some class" to it.

Shaw, in the Stoddard-Dayton, made several fast laps, and gives promise of making "good" in this his first road race.

A most interesting piece of gossip, one effecting the appointment of the future chairman of the contest board has reached this point. It is to the effect that the Manufacturers' Contest Association has officially filed notice with the American Automobile Association that the racing alliance now existing between the two bodies is to be severed, and has furnished President Speare of the A. A. A. with a copy of the proposed new alliance.

New Clause Is Interesting.

One of the most interesting sections is that pertaining to the method of the appointment of the chairman of the racing or contest board. This clause it is understood provides that in the future the chairman of this committee shall be appointed by the president of the American Automobile Association from a list of eligibles prepared and furnished by the Manufacturers' Contest Association.

A meeting of the Manufacturers' Contest Association will be held in this city on Saturday and then the full facts will be made known.

SHELLS HIT CRUISER DURING PRACTICE

LORIENT, France, Sept. 1.—An extraordinary accident occurred to-day during gunnery practice off Quiberon. Owing, it is believed, to an error in aiming one of the guns aboard the French armored cruiser Gloire, six shells were fired into the cruiser Marseillaise, one of which penetrated the hull and burst inside. No one was injured, as the crew was in other parts of the ship.

FAMOUS ACTRESS MAY NEVER SING 'M'CLUSKEY' AGAIN

Miss Maggie Cline.

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—Maggie Cline, the actress, is seriously ill at the Park Inn, Rockaway Park, and it was said to-day that her recovery is doubtful.

Miss Cline has been performing at a theatre on Rockaway Beach for the past week, and Monday night she ate lobster, followed by ice cream. She was stricken with ptomaine poisoning, and a recurrence of another internal trouble, which brought her almost to death's door a year ago. Complications are feared which will make it unlikely that Maggie Cline, who has entertained vaudeville audiences for a quarter of a century, will ever sing "Thrown Him Down, McCluskey" for them again.

SPAIN WINS BIG VICTORY IN MOROCCO

MADRID, Sept. 1.—The Spaniards have won their first decisive victory in Morocco. Word was brought here to-day of a five-hour battle near Zoco el Arbra when 2,000 Moors attacked a Spanish artillery troop, but were driven off. The Spanish unlimbered fired their cannon and mowed down the Kabyles. The Moorish losses were extremely heavy although the Spaniards had only three men wounded. All the buildings in range of the guns were levelled.

This is the first encouragement the Spanish have had on their advance from Melilla. Their first operations were checked by the Moors, but the forward movement will likely be recommended again now.

Despite the heavy losses suffered by the Kabyles, a second attack was made later in the day, the famous chieftain, El Chaldy, leading the attack. Again the Spaniards repulsed the fierce tribesmen, inflicting heavy loss. The Moors are now erecting fortifications at strategic points, apparently planning to let the foes begin the offensive movement.

SHOCKING CONFESSIONS will be told in the SUNDAY AMERICAN'S installment of the "Diary of a Faithless Husband." It ends Sunday.

AUTO FLOPS, YOUTH KILLED, ANOTHER DYING

OAK BLUFFS, Sept. 1.—One man is dead and five other young men were seriously injured as the result of an automobile accident on the West Tisbury road near here, just after midnight. The dead man is Walter Phillips, son of Harry O. Phillips, a wealthy wire manufacturer of Pawtucket, R. I.

The injured are: Francis L. Vanderlip, Boston; Joseph Keller, Medford; George M. Brude, Edgartown; William Sweeney, Oak Bluffs; Charles A. Kotsch, chauffeur, New Britain, Ct.

Charles Kotsch, the chauffeur of the car, is dying with a broken neck. The car is owned by W. H. Hart, also of New Britain, Ct.

The car was going down the West Tisbury road in the direction of the West Tisbury Cemetery. Just before reaching the cemetery a double turn is encountered. Kotsch, the chauffeur, made the first part of the turn successfully, but as the auto sped around the second half the right rear wheel broke from the hub.

The car sped for a distance of fifty feet, then turned turtle. Phillips was killed instantly. A portion of the front of the car was driven with great force into Kotsch's neck, breaking it. Hart was badly crushed beneath the tonneau.

COLER FLAYS M'CLELLAN

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—Bird S. Coler, president of the borough of Brooklyn, has preferred charges against Mayor McClellan to Governor Hughes. He charges the mayor with using his commissioners of accounts, who are now engaged in investigating Coler's own official conduct, for furthering his political and personal purposes.

"Vicious abuse of the mayor's political power" is the borough president's characterization. Coler avers that the investigation of the three borough presidents—Manhattan, Brooklyn and the Bronx—was inspired by a desire on McClellan's part to avenge himself on political enemies and to create the false impression that the immense city budget was due to waste by the borough presidents and not by the mayor's own administration.

Coler characterizes the commissioners of accounts as McClellan's tools, who threaten, intimidate and torture witnesses. As the borough president views the investigation of his own office, no effort has been made to ascertain the truth.

POSTAL CONTRACT IS LOST TO MAINE FIRM

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1.—The contract for supplying 3,487,000,000 postal cards to the Postoffice Department during the four years beginning January 1, 1910, was awarded to-day by Postmaster-General Hitchcock to the Government Printing Office, which submitted the lowest bid, $934,717.95. There were two other bidders, one being the Oxford Paper Company of Rumford Falls, Me., which has furnished postal cards to the Government for the past four years. It is reported that this will cause the Maine plant to close its doors.

JUSTICE MOODY CARRIED HOME IN AMBULANCE

HAVERHILL, Sept. 1.—Associate Justice William H. Moody of the United States Supreme Court is in a helpless condition to-day at his home on Saltonstall road, his lower limbs crippled by rheumatism and his once vigorous frame shattered by the effects of his long illness. The noted jurist, although critically ill, experienced a slight rally to-day.

In spite of the long train ride from New York, he passed a very comfortable night. He was more buoyant to-day than at any other time in the last several months, being cheered by the presence of his faithful sister, Miss Mary Moody, who is in constant attendance at his bedside.

Attending physicians did not issue any bulletins this morning. Neither did Justice Moody's private secretary J. A. Krotz. In view of the fact that both declared they would issue bulletins if Justice Moody's condition showed any turn for the worse over night, it is generally thought the eminent jurist had a comfortable night, and slept well.

President Taft may take a run over from Beverly in his automobile, either to-day or to-morrow, to see Justice Moody. The jurist and the President are old friends. The latter learned to-day of the arrival of Justice Moody in Haverhill, and expressed the hope that his old friend would rapidly recover.

Although his condition is serious, Justice Moody wants to meet all of the friends he knew when he was plain "Bill" Moody. He is going to hold open house, so to speak, while he is here, and greet all who care to call and see him.

When it was learned to-day that the justice would be glad to meet all who cared to visit him at his home on Saltonstall, many men, prominent in the business and political life of Essex County, made arrangements to call on the jurist.

Justice Moody confidently believes his progress towards complete restoration of his health will be rapid. He has tried sanitariums and the baths at Hot Springs, but at neither place was his condition bettered. He believes that in his boyhood home he will again regain his health.

When he told his attending physicians that he would like to meet all of his old friends they readily agreed to the suggestion. They are of the opinion that his meeting with friends of years gone by will keep up his spirit, make him more buoyant and help greatly the course of treatment which he is taking.

In this city, where he lived the most of his life, great sympathy is expressed for the jurist. Although an associate justice of the highest tribunal in the land, he is known to every woman, man and child in his city as "Bill" Moody, the most democratic of men.

CRUSHED TO DEATH IN MACHINE

DEDHAM, Sept. 1.—Death came suddenly to Genaro Christello, twenty, employed in the carpet mill of the Cochrane Manufacturing Company, off Milton street, East Dedham, for the picker into which he was drawn held him in such a merciless clutch, after squeezing and tearing his life out, that the machinery had to be taken apart in order to extricate his mangled body. His neck was broken, his right arm fractured and his right side torn. Christello, who was unmarried, lived at No. 22 High street. He came from Italy about six months ago.

SAYS SUBMARINES CAN GUARD COAST

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 1.—With a sufficient number of submarines guarding the coast, the battleships of an enemy venturing too close to the United States would be completely at the mercy of these small craft, declared Commander Charles C. Marsh, U. S. N., in a lecture before the naval war college.

He told of the experiments with the submarines and of the impossibility of picking them up by day and night and had made in this branch of warfare. England, he said, did not take kindly to the submarines at first, but realizing the possibilities of these little vessels, she now led in submarines and was adding to those already in commission.

A SUNDAY AMERICAN want advt. is often the road to fortune.

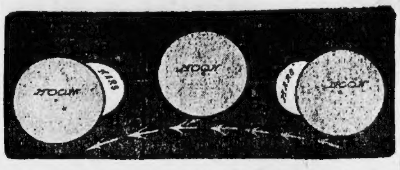
TORPEDO BOATS TO BE SHOT UP AGAIN

NORFOLK, Va., Sept. 1.—Fair weather prevailed to-day for the continuation of the battle practice of the Atlantic fleet. The torpedo boat O'Brien which was pretty well shot up by the battleships several days ago, and the torpedo boat Nicholson, were towed out to the drill grounds by the tug Hercules and anchored for target practice. Both vessels were filled with cork to prevent sinking in case any of the projectiles struck a vulnerable spot.

FALLS 90 FEET OUT OF BALLOON; UNHURT

MACON, Ga., Sept. 1.—Falling ninety feet from a balloon here where the hold of his left hand became disengaged by the premature explosion of a large cannon cracker which was part of an aerial pyrotechnic display, H. W. Churchill of Carson City, Mich., sustained no further injury than the mangling of his hand by the explosion. The hand will be amputated.

Moon to Eclipse Mars at 9 O'Clock To-night



Three phases of the moon's eclipse of the warrior planet, going under, the total obscuration, and the final phase of the phenomenon.

Watch the moon just before 9 o'clock to-night—at 8:42 to be exact. Note the largest and brightest star near it. You will see the moon obscure that star for almost an hour. Then the star will reappear. That star is the planet Mars.

The eclipse or "occultation" as the astronomers call it, will not be repeated for years. The eclipse to-night will be easily seen with the naked eye, though a pair of field glasses will show the phenomenon more clearly.

At Harvard, Yale and other college observatores photographs of the eclipse will be made to-night.

According to Professor Robert A. Brown of the Yale observatory a more correct estimate of the diameter of the moon than is now known may be obtained to-night. Astronomers may also learn more of the atmosphere on the moon. The presence of an atmosphere on the moon would produce a dimming or distortion of the image of Mars during the eclipse.

GIVES LIFE FOR FRIEND ON EVE OF MARRIAGE

On the eve of his marriage to Miss Stella Garton, daughter of Rev. J. Vanor Garton, pastor of the West Somerville Baptist Church, Rev. Stanley W. Roberts, a Baptist clergyman of West Somerville, is dead in New York, following his heroic rescue of Harry Meyers of Somerville from death in Hempstead Bay.

He died as the result of exhaustion, following his desperate struggle to save Meyers. Word of his death was received by Miss Garton the day she returned from her vacation. She has gone to New York with her father to assist in arranging for the removal of the body of her fiance to Somerville.

The Rev. Mr. Roberts, who is the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver S. Roberts of No. 5 Kidder avenue, West Somerville, went in bathing off Point Lookout beach with Meyers. There was a large crowd in bathing at the time.

Mr. Meyers went out some distance and it is believed he was seized with a cramp. He called for aid and the Rev. Mr. Roberts, who was sitting on the beach, jumped into the water and swam to the aid of his friend. He caught Myers by the hair and started with him for the shore.

He had proceeded but a few feet when Meyers caught hold of him and started struggling. Mr. Roberts had a hard time reaching the shallow water with Meyers, who was struggling all the while. As he was within a few feet of the shore, three men waded out in the shallow water and brought both men ashore.

Mr. Roberts was almost dead when he reached the shore and Mr. Meyers was unconscious but still breathing. A special trolley car was raced to Freeport, where in response to a telephone call, Dr. Carman of Freeport hastened, and as soon as he was aboard the trolley car went full speed back to the beach. The doctor arrived too late to save Mr. Roberts, who died a few minutes after he was brought ashore, but succeeded after several hours' work in restoring Mr. Meyers to consciousness.

LABOR BEGINS DRAPER FIGHT

Urgent appeals from every Central Labor Union in the state are being sent out to the numerous affiliated local trade local committees in each district to carry on organized labor's fight against the reelection of Governor Draper. This was decided on at the Wells Memorial hall meeting of the Massachusetts State Branch, A. F. of L., campaign, executive and legislative committees. Each central labor union, with three delegates from every local union, is to carry on the campaign in its own district. The State Branch committee will furnish speakers for the different sub-committees whenever requested to do so. Dennis D. Driscoll, secretary-treasurer of the State Branch states that money to carry on the anti-Draper fight is being subscribed freely by the trade unions.

50,000 FREE MEALS AT BIG BARBECUE

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Sept. 1.—Fifty thousand full meals, including 22,000 pounds of barbecued meat and 4,500 gallons of Kentucky "Burgoo," were consumed by the people who took advantage to-day of the first day of the "Jeffersonian Barbecue," held at the State Fair Grounds. There were speeches from practically all the Democratic Congressmen and prominent office holders of Kentucky.

WOMAN SEES SEER, EXPIRES MYSTERIOUSLY

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—Alleging that his mother's death followed a visit to Professor George H. Parker, a palmist and clairvoyant of No. 110 West Forty-fifth street, New York, Frederick W. M. Thackeray called at the office of District Attorney Jerome and asked him to investigate the cause of death.

At the same time the Bronx Detective Bureau began an investigation, and the coroner directed that the body of Mrs. J. A. Derr, the dead woman, be held at the undertaking establishment until further notice.

Thackeray, who is a magazine writer and son of Mrs. Derr by her first marriage, says he is a grand-nephew of William Makepeace Thackeray, the English novelist. His mother died in the Fordham Hospital Sunday, after being a patient there less than twenty-four hours.

The death certificate, made out by Dr. O'Leary, gives pthisis as the cause of death, but Thackeray says his mother was in splendid health until she returned to her home, Two Hundred and Forty-ninth street and Broadway, on the evening of August 12 after a visit to Palmist Parker. She was an ardent believer in telepathy and mental suggestion, and visited Parker, it is alleged, thinking he could locate her husband, John A. Derr, who has been missing from home for seven months.

Thackeray and his wife said that Mrs. Derr returned from her visit to Parker's place hysterical and in a state of collapse. She took to bed and never was able to leave it. Though Mrs. Thackeray found bruises all over her mother-in-law's body, Mrs. Derr would make no statement as to the cause of her condition, until a few days before she died, when she told Thackeray, his wife and Mrs. H. Scott, of No. 38 Garden street, Yonkers, that Parker had used hypnotic suggestion. What happened in his office during the two-hour interview is not disclosed. No autopsy has been held.

The AMERICAN has more circulation than all the other evening papers put together.

HUGHES MAY OUST MAYOR

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—It is conceded among politicians to-day that Governor Hughes cannot ignore the charges preferred against Mayor McClellan by Borough President Bird S. Coler of Brooklyn, but there is no intimation as to what the Governor will do. He may hold a hearing or appoint a commission to investigate. He can suspend the Mayor for thirty days, pending the hearing. If the Governor should remove him the Mayor has no appeal.

Mayor McClellan is expected in the city Saturday. His friends laugh at the charges. It is not the first time accusations against him have been filed with the Governor. Dr. Parkhurst forwarded charges against Mayor McClellan for alleged failure to enforce the Sunday law.

Borough President Coler to-day refused to discuss his charges, saying they spoke for themselves. The document forwarded to Albany charges the Mayor with misuse of authority and the misappropriation of public funds.

Coler refers to the Commissioners of Accounts as McClellan's tools, who "threaten, intimidate and torture witnesses." He declares they are being used to "destroy public confidence" in the borough presidents, "to whom he was politically and personally hostile." He says the Mayor would make it appear that the waste of his administration has been due to the borough presidents."

DICKINSON'S ACT STIRS MRS. SUTTON

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1.—"I am surprised at the action of the War Department. This is not a Court of Inquiry. The exhumation of my son's body is sacred to myself," said Mrs. Rosa B. Sutton when informed to-day that Secretary of War Dickinson had directed that the young marine officers involved in the Sutton tragedy might have a representative present at the exhumation of the body of her son if they wished to do so. She expected the privilege of designating those who would participate in the service incidental to the consecration of the as yet unhallowed grave in Arlington Cemetery.

LADY WARD SUFFRAGIST CHAMPION

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—"Those women of Newport society who snubbed or criticized Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont for her efforts to bring about woman's suffrage in America are snobs. I do not know Mrs. Belmont, but her efforts to gain votes for women should be praised, not opposed, especially by her own sex."

Lady Joseph Ward, wife of the prime minister of New Zealand, made this comment to-day upon the opposition to Mrs. Belmont, and to suffrage, of the Newport women who blame the society leader for having what they termed a "sensational" affair on her lawn and in her Marble palace last week.

"In my country," she said "there is no such snobbishness. Rich and poor cast their ballots side by side, and there is no hint of lost prestige of a woman of highest rank who exercises her right to vote. In fact, we would think it strange if she did not."

Lady Ward, with her husband, son and daughter, arrived in New York Saturday on the Campania and have been busy sightseeing since. The Wards left for Montreal, but before she departed Lady Ward talked to an AMERICAN reporter on several topics interesting to women.

"I am frank in saying that the place that made the strongest impression on me was Coney Island," said Lady Ward. "If we had a Coney Island in New Zeland, our country would be perfect. I enjoyed the evening we spent there immensely. Why do you know I rode the chutes "five times.

"In New Zealand women exercise all their rights in politics, but they seldom make speeches in public. We don't sit on juries or run for parliament. We did have a mayoress once in a town in the northern part of the colony, but no one seems inclined to want to repeat the experiment.

"She was very capable, but the fact is that we women are very busy with our domestic affairs and quite content to leave the management of public affairs to the men."

QUADRUPLETS NOW IN MAINE

DOVER, Me., Sept. 1.—Milo, a small village about twelve miles from here, is to be the home of the Rev. and Mrs. Samuel H. Seccombe, formerly of Goshen, Mass., and their eight children, four of whom they claim are quadruplets. They have many friends in that section of the county.

The Seccombes came here direct from Boston. They are staying at the Dover House, on South street. They were delayed here on account of their baggage having been missent to Dover, N. H.

On the trains in this State the four babies attracted no end of attention, many people at once recognizing the family from the accounts of the unusual circumstances surrounding their residence and departure from Goshen. They expect to make their home in the future in this county, where they have friends.

MISS DAISY M'COY, MINSTREL GIRL, JUST MARRIED

The culmination of a courtship of two years terminated in St. Peter's Church, Meeting House Hill, Dorchester, when the Rev. Florence Halloran married Miss Daisy McCoy of Williams park, Dorchester, to Michael R. Sullivan of Bondsville, Mass.

Miss McCoy, or rather Mrs. Sullivan, three years ago made a great hit as an end "man" at the Catholic Club minstrel show, at the Dudley-Street Opera House, captivating the crowd by her funny songs and dances. Since then she graduated from the Boston Normal School. After teaching a short while at the Christopher Gibson School, in her home district, she went to Palmer, to teach in the Grammar School there.

Boarding in the same house was Mr. Sullivan. They sat at the same table and Dorchester was surprised to hear the engagement announced early in the Summer when the Palmer School closed.

Monica H. McCoy, a sister of the bride, was the maid of honor, and Michael Moriarty was best man. After a two weeks' trip to Montreal, Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan will take up their residence in Bondsville, where Mr. Sullivan has a handsome cottage.

DYING ARTIST TAKES BRIDE

NEW HAVEN, Sept. 1.—Frederick Hotchkiss Miner, a young illustrator of this city, died of typhoid fever at his father's cottage in Woodmont a few hours after his marriage.

The marriage took place at the request of the sick man and the bride was Miss Helen Crone of Milford. Their wedding was set for the middle of October. The Rev. Dr. Williams of New York married the couple, and from the moment the ceremony was performed until the death of the young man this afternoon the heartbroken young woman remained at the bedside.

Miner was twenty-three years old. Miss Crone is a school teacher in Milford.

A. Rowden King of Brooklyn, N. Y., the associate editor of the Morning Journal-Courier and a graduate of Yale in 1906, is critically ill with the fever, and it was stated at the New Haven Hospital that slight hope was held out for his recovery.

Both Mr. Miner and Mr. King are said to have contracted the disease at Woodmont, where several other persons have been taken ill during the past month. The sickness at this Summer resort is said to have been caused by infected milk.

WATCH AND WARD RAID OPIUM DENS OVER POLICE HEADS

The Watch and Ward Society has again found it necessary to do the work of the Boston police and over the heads of the complacent, smugly-content Commissioner, Superintendent W. H. Pierce, and innumerable subordinates, who cost the city $2,000,000 a year, has started in to clean up the opium dens of Chinatown.

Raids personally conducted by Secretary J. Frank Chase of the society were made yesterday afternoon and eight or nine inspectors, detailed reluctantly by the Commissioner to serve the warrants, managed to see the newspaper reporters when it was all over and give them their names.

"Little Jack Horner sat in a corner eating his Christmas pie:
"He put in his thumb and took out a plum and said what a good boy am I!"

This may not be the exact language of the nursery rhyme, but every one of the plain clothes men who helped Secretary Chase to catch thirteen prisoners in five different opium dives was Little Jack Horner to the life.

Only a month ago two inspectors who are detailed to the Chinese quarter volunteered to take an AMERICAN reporter through the district, and many times assured him it was the most orderly foreign section in Boston.

"Opium smoking!" Well, they guessed not. Not while they were on the job.

Mr. Chase has had so many complaints from fathers and mothers who have seen their boys and girls, as young some of them as twelve years of age, going down to destruction through the opium and cocaine joints of Chinatown that he almost despaired. With the insignificant sum of a few thousands a year it certainly does seem like attempting to clean the Augean stables with a tooth pick. Undaunted, however, this splendid young clergyman, a fighter in every ounce of his tissue, threw several of his men into the district. For a fortnight he has been shaking police headquarters with arrest after arrest for vending cocaine, with one conviction after another. Now he is after the money-making opium joints.

Agents of the Watch and Ward Society, who have been working to secure evidence in the Chinatown district for some time, procured the warrants which were turned over to the officials. Twelve inspectors were detailed upon the case. At a given signal the men entered the stores at Nos. 40, 42 and 73 Harrison avenue and No. 12 Oxford street and arrested several men and confiscated opium and contraband articles valued at several hundred dollars. Another raiding party went to No. 65 Corning street where more opium was found and a man who gave the name of John Porter, fifty-five years old was arrested for selling opium unlawfully.

Those arrested were: Harry Hong, thirty-five years old, John Forty, fifty-four years old, and John Meridan, forty-eight years old, charged with keeping opium, John Shaked, thirty-nine years old, for the illegal sale of opium, and Bing Wong, Moy Sing, Soon Lung, Soon Shung, Moy Lee, Moy Kee, War Lee and Chin Wah.

It is believed that all of these names are fictitious. The prisoners were taken to the LaGrange street station and locked up, but were later bailed out.

'FIEND!' CRIES CARRIE NATION

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 1.—"Go away from me, you cigarette fiend, you smell bad," shouted Mrs. Carrie Nation of hatchet fame to an Indianapolis newspaper reporter who sought to interview the Kansas lecturer during the few moments between trains from Columbus, Ohio, en route for Peoria.

In a high-pitched, rasping voice she continued: "I won't talk to a reporter that smokes cigarettes. Shame on you, a great big fellow like you. You call yourself a man, but you're nothing but a two-legged fiend."

But when the reporter picked up her luggage and carried it to her car she subsided and confided to him the fact that Indianapolis is Hell, and always will be as long as there are saloons in it.

"But cigarettes—I would rather have a boy of mine drink whiskey than smoke cigarettes," she said.

EXPRESS CRASHES INTO WORK TRAIN

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 1.—Engineer Walter D. White, for fifty years in the service of the Northern Pacific railroad, was instantly killed and ten persons injured, six of them seriously, when the eastbound North Coast Limited train of the Northern Pacific railroad ran into a work train while rounding a curve a half mile east of Detroit, Minn. The train was two hours late, and was running fifty miles an hour when it hit the work train. The baggage and mail cars turned over and landed in a swamp.

SOME 'DON'TS' FOR PUPILS

FALL RIVER, Sept. 1.—A set of "Don'ts" will meet the eyes of every pupil of the schools of this city, when they return to their studies. They are pasted in all the text books and the importance of observing them will be impressed upon the young people at every turn.

Among the "Don'ts" are the following:

Do not spit if you can help it. Never spit on a slate, floor or sidewalk. Spitting promotes consumption and other diseases.

Do not put the fingers into the mouth.

Never lick your fingers when turning pages or when counting money.

Do not put pencils into the mouth or wet them with the lips.

Do not put money into the mouth.

Do not put anything into the mouth except food and drink.

Do not swap apple cores, candy, chewing gum, half-eaten food, whistles or beanblowers, or anything that is put in the mouth.

SHOCKING CONFESSIONS will be told in the SUNDAY AMERICAN'S installment of the "Diary of a Faithless Husband." It ends Sunday.

DANCING PARTY TO HELP A CHURCH

The annual reunion of the Catholic residents of the villages from Pemberton to Surfside, in Hull, who compose the congregation of the Church of St. Mary's of the Bay, will take place Friday evening at the Hotel Pemberton. The feature of the entertainment will be whist and dancing. The proceeds of the reunion will be devoted to the enlargement of the church. The constantly increasing Catholic population of the Hull summer colony has necessitated an increase of the sittings of the church by 50 per cent.

Wanted—a Trial

Our chef asks the chance to bake for you a single dish of beans. Then, if you like them better than those you baked, let him serve you always.

This is what he will do:

He will select, from the choicest Michigan beans, only the whitest, the plumpest, the fullest-grown.

He will pay $2.25 per bushel for them. That's more than seven times what some beans would cost.

He will make the sauce from whole tomatoes, ripened on the vines. He will use no scraps—no tomatoes picked green—nothing but the luscious fruit.

This tomato sauce will cost him five times as much as the usual, but it will have a superlative zest.

He will bake the beans, the tomato sauce and the pork all together, to give you a delicious blend.

He will bake with live steam—not with dry heat. Not a bean will be crisped; not a skin will be broken.

The beans will be baked until they are mealy, yet they'll be nutty because they are whole.

They will not be mushy, broken and soggy, like the beans that are baked at home.

He will heat his ovens to 245 degrees. He can do that, using steam, without burning the beans.

He will bake in small parcels, so the full heat of the oven will reach every bean.

That terrific heat will separate the particles so the digestive juices can get to them.

Your home-baked beans are heavy and hard to digest. Part of them always ferment and form gas.

That is due to lack of heat. The center of your baking dish rarely gets heated above 100 degrees.

Our chef's beans will digest.

We will send these beans to you, fresh and savory, ready for instant serving. No waiting, no bother. If you want them hot, simply put the can in hot water.

Please try them. They will give you a new idea of how good beans can be. Then let the people who eat them decide if they want these beans again.

Let's leave the decision to them.

Van Camp's BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE
PORK AND BEANS

This is now the national dish—the dish of the millions. To try them once means to use them forever. No other beans can compare with them.

We have worked 48 years to perfect this dish, and it's worth it.

Beans are Nature's choicest food—84% nutriment. Their food value is greater than meat, yet they cost but a third as much.

When beans were baked in the old way, people ate them hardly once a week. Baked in the new way, they've become a daily dish.

But don't think that all ready-baked beans are alike. Don't get some commonplace brand.

Van Camp's are unique. If you will once compare them with other beans you will see why the world demands them.

Three sizes: 10, 15 and 20 cents per can.

NORTH POLE IS FOUND BY DR. COOK

Centuries Old Search Accomplished by American Explorer

Brooklyn Scientist, Believed to Have Been Lost for Nearly a Year, Dashes North With Eight Eskimo and Sends Word of His Success to Copenhagen.

husband and was confident he would return in his own time safely. She has supreme faith in his ability to overcome the countless rigors of life in the Arctics.

Dash Hastily Conceived.

Dr. Cook's attempt to reach the Pole was unpremeditated. A year ago last Spring he started on a hunting expedition with John R. Bradley, a wealthy New Yorker, who had hunted game in all corners of the world except the Polar regions. Mr. Bradley bought a 110-ton Gloucester fishing schooner with an auxiliary gasoline engine, renamed her the John R. Bradley, and in this vessel went north, Dr. Cook being in command.

The hunting trip ended the latter part of August, 1907, and on the 27th the schooner started from Annortok, on the northwest coast of Greenland, back for New York. Almost up to the last it was expected Dr. Cook would return with the party, but he decided to remain and make a one-man try for the Pole. One of the crew of the schooner—Rudolph Franke—volunteered to stay at Annortok and watch the supplies.

Story From Cook.

Rudolph Franke, who was with Cook and has returned home with a letter from Cook sent by an Esquimaux messenger, has given some tremendously interesting descriptions of the party's adventures.

The letter from Cook follows:

The Polar Sea,
North of C. Hubbard.

Dear Rudolph: Thus far it has gone very well, but the weather has been awful cold. We got no musk ox until we had crossed Elleswere Land, but since we have secured 102 musk ox, five bears and about 150 hares.

The Esquimaux will probably return slowly, for they like this land very well. I do not expect them to reach you until about the middle of May. If we are lucky we will take a short cut back and will get to Annortok by the end of May.

When the natives get back give them all one block of tobacco and nothing more until I get back, except those that go away. Picodilma and Egingwah will go away. Give them a knife and a hatchet each and any other thing we can spare which they want.

If you get a chance send to Igloodohoming, and also to the island off North Star, a box of biscuits and a can of alcohol.

Headed for the Pole.

To the present we have seen nothing of Croker Land, and I am taking a straight course for the Pole. The boys are doing well, and I have plenty of dogs. I hope to succeed. At any rate I will make a desperate attempt.

While I expect to get back to you by the end of May, still I wish you to be ready to go to Acponie, the island off North Star, where the whalers' steamers come, by the 5th of June, and if I am not back go home with the whalers. I think, however, we will be back.

Gather all the blue fox skins you can. These must be our money on the return trip. If you can get a few bear skins take them, also narwhal and walrus tusks, but do not give too much for them.

The dogs that come back that belong to us turn over to Ponlcpa to feed and work.

Starts on Journey.

If Kudnu (the Dane) is still there, urge him to wait for our return either at Annortok or at North Star, for I am anxious to go to Uperuivik at once on our return, and he can be of much use to us.

There is likely to be much open water between you and Etah, so you had better send the trunk, the norwhal tusks and all things for the return to Etah at least, if not further, as soon as you can.

I have regretted many times that you are not with us, but at the moment it seemed best to send you back, and on the whole you are more assistance to me at the house, to guard and care for our things, than here in the field in this awful cold and wind. I trust you are of the same opinion.

So good-by, and now for the pole!

Yours cordially,

FREDERICK A. COOK.

Prepares for Winter.

Francke said on the night of August 26, 1907, the ship John R. Bradley discharged the stores and provisions and the outfit at Annortok, twenty miles north of Etah. It was a terrible night with ice and gales and from Dr. Cook to the lowest sailor aboard all had to work hard. It looked bad to them all, but they escaped with the loss of one dory. Continuing Francke said:

"Early in September our Winter quarters were in first-class condition, and we began to lay in a stock of meat for the Winter. We used the whole month for hunting. Before the long night set in Dr. Cook made a sledge trip to the Big Humboldt glacier and returned to Winter quarters at the beginning of the long Arctic night. It was at this time very cold, 30 or 40 degrees below zero. The ice was not always firm, being broken up and then closed together and travelling was dangerous, especially in the morning and at evening.

"Dr. Cook was nearly drowned and escaped with his life in an encounter with polar bears. The grease in the guns was so hard that he could not use them and they put knives on long sticks to defend their lives against the bears.

"On the return trip Dr. Cook saw drift wood, and the Esquimaux found harpoons supposed to come from a wrecked vessel. Dr. Cook intended to send relief to the house on Cape Sabine, but could not do do so at this time, it was so stormy, dark and because of drift ice.

Faced Many Privations.

"One time when Dr. Cook was away from camp on a trip I prepared dog food for the Spring campaign. We found a way to prepare dog food that will give Dr. Cook an immense advantage over all other explorers.

"Now began the long Arctic night and we were very busy building sledges and fitting out everything. The time was always too short and we worked from early morning to late evening.

"In the middle of November our furs were nearly gone. Dr. Cook went south to Inglefield Gulf and North Star Bay to purchase furs, clothing and harness outfit, which were badly needed. They could not finish the voyage during that moonlight and returned in the middle of December. The trip, Dr. Cook told me, was in one way a pleasant and interesting one, but the darkness and the wind partly destroyed the pleasure.

"Cook was long overdue, and I was overjoyed when he entered the house one evening, smiling, and we were once more together. I was glad to surprise him by finishing the twenty-second box of our special dog food, and we were in very good spirits again.

Built House of Boxes.

"Now came the holidays of Christmas and New Year, but we did not have much time to devote to them. Our house was cleaned, and we got our Christmas dinner in tip-top conditions. We had a house built of boxes, twelve by twelve feet square, consisting of one room, and it was used for carpentering, meat curing, baking, cooking, living and sleeping, not to forget its being a reception chamber for visiting Esquimaux.

"January 10 Dr. Cook sent me over to Flagler Bay with three Esquimaux to hunt for musk ox and to look after the people whom we supposed had been left there from a shipwreck, but we found nobody. The soft snow stoped us from entering Flagler Bay and made the musk ox hunt impossible, and we returned to Winter quarters on January 19. At this time the thermometer registered 73 below zero.

Started at Noon.

"The last weeks we were together there was a lot to do, and everything being completed, we started on February 20, for the far North. I remember it was only noon when we left our quarters and camped the first night in three snowhouses on the ice floe in Kano basin. The next day, after one hundred and forty days of darkness, we again saw the sun and reacered Cape Sabine late in the evening. Here we were stormbound the next day. The last day's march brought us to Rice Strait, ten miles northwest of Greeley's memorable Winter quarters of 1883-1884. The next march brought us in Flagler Bay and Dr. Cook sent me back to Annortok March 3 with the first division, after placing provisions at the head of Flagler Bay to guard against our Winter quarters.

In October, 1907, not less than seven expeditions had been organized or were then being prepared to get to the pole. Besides Dr. Cook's were the following:

Robert E. Peary, who was waiting on the northern coast for additional funds; Captain Amundsen, preparing for a dash via Behring Sea; Captain Joseph E. Bernier of Canada; Baldwin, who was with the Ziegler expedition, getting ready for a trip on his own account, and Max Fleischman, an enthusiastic amateur, getting his outfit together.

Planned Relief Expedition.

Last June Cook's friends began to fear for his safety and made plans to send an expedition of relief. He had then been in the ice two years. His last message was dated March 17, 1908, from forty miles north of Cape Thomas Hubbard. He then planned to get home by September, 1908, via Annotork or Upernavik, Greenland.

The Arctic Club, whose president is Rear Admiral A. Schley, planned last Spring to send an expedition under Dillon Wallace to hunt for the explorer, but abandoned that plan and sent to the American consul at Dundee an offer of $1,000 reward to any whaler who would bring news of Dr. Cook. The oger arrived at Dundee after the last whaler had departed for the North. Dr. Stebbins's committee then arranged with H. L. Bridgeman to contribute $1,000 to the expedition to go North in July with supplies for Peary on condition that inquiry be made at all stopping places for Dr. Cook and that if found he be relieved or brought back.

Feared Cook Lost.

Admiral Schley writing for funds equip this relief expedition said:

"It is the work of such men as Dr. Cook that give prestige to our country, adds renown to our character and reflects honor upon our flag. The Arctic Club of America feels certain that our countrymen will aid it in bringing about the rescue of this heroic and daring explorer, or should misadventure have overtaken him, to bring back his honored remains for sepulchre in the land he loved and to whose renown his wonderful career has added so much.

It is estimated that a sum not exceeding $30,000 will organize, equip and provision, and enable Mr. Dillon Wallace of very large Arctic experience in Polar exploration, to lead an expedition that will be prepared to remain, if need be, eighteen months from July of 1909. My own experience in those regions teaches that a day or even an hour has a value when life is to be saved."

[Peary's theory] below zero, a few degrees colder in the Winter would make little difference. That h ereckoned contrary to the belief of most Arctic adventurers is of little importance. It would be about as bright as moonlight nights in the open country as we know them, and moreover travelling would be almost entirely by compass anyway.

Peary and Cook, though leading separate expeditions, went out upon the same general theory that Peary advanced when he made his first trip in search of the Pole.

Determined to Try Until He Won.

That was a simple determination that if he failed to reach the goal on the first trip he would go over the same route on the second and consequently would be more successful as the difficulties of the first would be konwn and met; if the second failed the third would succeed, or if that then the fourth and so on until at last he had realized his ambition.

Herbert L. Bridgman, secretary of the Arctic Club, and himself an explorer, said this afternoono that the news from Dr. Cook was too meagre to permit of conclusions. He said that he was skeptical of the report that Dr. Cook had actually reached the Pole. He thought it wise to await direct news from the explorer.

COOK DECORATED BY OTHER NATIONS

Dr. Frederick Albert Cook is forty-four years old. He was born at Callicoon Depot, Sullivan County, New York, June 10, 1865. He was the son of Dr. Theodore Albert Cook. hTe family name was changed from Koch to Cook. He took his degree of doctor of medicine from the University of New York in 1890 and was married in Brooklyn in 1902 to Mary Fidell Hunt, who has accompanied her husband on many of his explorations in the Arctic regions.

Dr. Cook's work as an explorer has been recognized by various nations, he having received the decoration of the Order of Leopold from Belgium, the gold medal of the Royal Society of Belgium, the silver medal of the Royal Geographical Society of Belgium. He is a member of the American Geological Society and the Brooklyn Medical Society. Dr. Cook was surgeon of the Peary Arctic expedition of 1891-2 and surgeon of the Pen Belgium Antarctic expedition in 1897-9.

Dr. Cook is the author of, "Through the first Antarctic Night," and has contributed extensively to magazines on polar and Antarctic explorations. His home is at No. 687 Bushwick avenue, Brooklyn.

Mountain Climber.

In 1906 Dr. Cook attracted public attention by climbing Mt. McKin, the highest mountain in North America, 20,000 feet above the sea. His pluck, daring and persistence are shown when it is known that he tried three times to climb this mountain before he succeeded. He was told it was an impossible task.

RECOVER 1,900 DEAD IN FLOOD

MONTEREY, Mex., Sept. 1.—The total number of bodies recovered from along the shores of the Santa Catarina river as a result of the flood total approximately 1,000. In Monterey 900 is the total, while meagre reports from along the valley increase the number. However, but little is yet known as to the loss of life and damage outside of this city.

That the entire number lost will ever be known is not probable, as bodies must be buried in the sands and mud deposited by the falling river in the eddies caused by the numerous turns and bends in the stream's channel.

Reports continue meagre from points down the valley, but it is known that the village of Sanfran was destroyed; the town of San Juan is badly damaged and the town of Camargo on the Rio Grande is reported to have been washed away.

TRAIN KILLS AEROPLANIST

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 1.—Louis Raynaud, the inventor of an airship which was to have given its initial flight on Sunday, was killed when the carriage in which he was returning from a day's work on the aeroplane was struck by a New Orleans & Great Northern passenger train at Gentilly road and Bruxelles street here.

His invention had been kept a secret until a short time ago. Since then it has been the object of much interest and great things were expected of it. The machine is one of the biplane order, differing from the Wright brothers' aeroplane only in that it has a long tail which it is claimed would make it more steady. It was to have carried two or three passengers.

Search for the Pole Materially Aided by Use of Auto-Sled, That Was Easily Converted Into Boat When Water Was Encountered.

Mount McKinley was discovered fourteen years ago. It is part of the Alaskan range, and scientists wanted to climb it to make most important calculations and observations. But the task was a terrible one. There were great sheer heights, one of which was a sheer hard smooth mountain side of 18,000 feet. The east and west side of the majestic mountain were great terraces of snow and ice, some of which had cliffs of 4,000 to 5,000 feet sheer drop. The only hope was to find a new route to the top. Dr. Cook found it. He sent the following telegram to Herbert L. Bridgman of Brooklyn:

Tyonek, Alaska.

We have reached the summit of Mount McKinley by a new route from the north and have mapped 3,000 miles of country. COOK.

Was Ever Confident.

Dr. Cook's best work was done on his antarctic expeditions. Here he proved himself a true scientist, as well as a daring explorer. He took measurements and observations everywhere, and studied the people of the lands he touched. He stayed long enough on lonely Terra del Fuego, the tip end of South America, to study the language of the savages there. He made a complete list of the words of their language, which is called Yahgan.

But back of it all Dr. Cook wanted to find the North Pole. As one of his friends told him one time, "Doctor, you have a lust to find that North Pole."

He believed that the Pole could be reached by a "dash" of a few men, aided by natives, all on sledges. He wrote frequent articles ofr the magazines telling of his ideas. Finally, he interested the wealthy John R. Bradley, and the comparatively inexpensive expedition was fitted out in 1907.

Planned Trip on Holiday.

The successful expedition which resulted came very suddenly. The converted fishing schooner John R. Bradley, with her owner, Mr. Bradley, started for Labrador on July 3, 1907, for a fishing trip. Captain Moses Bartlett of Brigus, N. S., was the skipper, and the crew consisted of five Newfoundlanders and two fishermen from Gloucester, Mass. Dr. Cook and Mrs. Cook were passengers on a holiday.

The craft headed for the North, went through Belle Isle straits, touched at Battle Harbor, Labrador, and finally landed in Greenland, and after a few days' big game shooting headed for Etah, Greenland.

Here Dr. Cook got the North Pole "lust" and said he wanted to be put off the ship. He had not even told his wife that he intended to make a "dash for the Pole."

He was landed at a little Esquimaux village. He took but one man from the Bradley.

Sole Companion a Cook.

His sole companion was Rudolph Frankton, a cook.

He planned to stay at Etah till December till the ice became hardened and then dash along the pack. He took two canvas boats to cross any open water encountered. Dr. Cook always believed that if Peary had taken with him boats of canvas he would have found the pole in '92.

Dr. Cook relied on a few natives and eighteen months' food, which the Bradley left him.

The Bradley returned to Gloucester on October 14, 1907, with Mrs. Cook and the crew, leaving Dr. Cook alone in the polar ice regions.

Here is what Dr. Cook himself wrote about the difficulties facing one who tried to find the North Pole and what he thought of how it must be found:

> Owing to the failure of the efforts of past ages we are likely to conclude that the north pole is not accessible; but no expedition has ever turned back because of any unsurmountable barrier, or because of the impossibility of marching further. The real difficulty is not the cold or the impediments of travelling over rough ice, it is the unimaginable hardship of carrying food, fuel and bedding for a journey that is certain to require five or six months.

BUG EXTERMINATOR KILLS INVENTOR

NEWARK, N. J., Sept. 1.—Milton J. Kent went to the house at No. 434 Fourth avenue, to exterminate roaches by a patent gas and was suffocated by his own preparation. He was dead when found by his partner, who went to seach for him when he did not return.

WATER AUTOS USED BY COOK ON DASH

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—From the first Dr. cook's dash has been clouded in a mass of curious factors. In the Spring of 1907 he accompanied John D. Bradley, the famous New York millionaire sportsman and traveller, in a hunting trip to Greenland. The two set sail from Gloucester, Mass., in a fishing schooner provisioned for a two years' cruise.

It has become known that some curious contrivances, savoring of amphibious automobiles, a combination of motor boat and ice runner, had been built for Dr. Cook by his brother at Callicoon, Sullivan County. When Mr. Bradley returned from Greenland, therefore, in August of 1907, bringing the news of Dr. Cook's adventure, none interested in Arctic research were much surprised.

Answer Peary's Attack.

Explorer Peary, who was then preparing for his expedition on the Roosevelt, on whicr he now is, was very angry, declaring the whole thing a premeditated and "put up job" to steal a march upon him and to embarrass him.

When he reached New York Mr. Bradley combatted all the animadversions against Dr. Cook. He said Dr. Cook's decision had been made on the spur of the moment, and that he, Bradley, had though the plan so good that he had financed the expedition.

The amphibious auto, he declared, was really a twenty-seven-foot whaleboat which he had built especially and was really a high-power motor boat, holding a 100-horsepower engine. It was sheathed with steel and weighed less than a thousand pounds. It was so made that it could travel over the ice with runners.

Peary is now somewhere up on the great polar pack, and should be close to Dr. Cook's old trail.

Dr. Cook went into the polar regions on this trip with a startling new theory as the basis of his final dash for the pole—that is, he intended to so time his advance that his journey over the great ice would fall in the Winter.

Radical as this may seem, great faith is expressed in it by ice men and pilots who have wintered in the great circle. Heretofore every explorer has pushed as far north as he could during his first Summer, and then has established Winter quarters. A double purpose was always in view, to recuperate during the colder months for the hard dash that was to come and to wait until the moving of the ice had opened up leads to give the explorers a chance to travel by the boats.

Staked Life on Chance.

Dr. Cook has revolutionized all this and staked his life on the result. He is no inexperienced adventurer, but a cool, practical ice navigator, who has gone through many campaigns. He was surgeon and ethnologist to the first Peary expedition.

This was in 1891-92. He was also commander of the expedition on the Zeta, a yacht, in 1893; organizer and commander of the expedition on the Miranda, a steamship, in 1894; surgeon, anthropologist and photographer of the Belgian Antarctic expedition of 1897-99, and surgeon to the Peary auxiliary expedition on the Erik, a steamship, in 1901.

On these expeditions he made a full study of ice and ice conditions and his present-day theory would seem to be a natural deduction. eII found the ice firmer in the winter and learned that comparatively smooth surfaces were presented for sledge parties, making progress easy for mile after mile. He reckoned that a winter dash would not be balked so frequently by the open lanes and that he advance would be regular.

Cold Not Considered.

This would be a great advantage in the feeding of men and dogs, as the demand on the stock would be more according to the computed schedule, bettering the health of both human beings and animals.

Temperature had little consideration, as Dr. Cook figured that the slightly colder atmosphere in Winter would have no appreciable effect, while if his men could keep closer to a regular diet that vitality would be sustained to a higher degree. As he had often found it as cold as 60 degrees

PORKY FLYNN WINS FROM BURKE IN A FAST BATTLE

Boston has sprung a new heavyweight boxing champion possibility on the fistic world.

James Flynn, a West End boy of nineteen, who rejoices in the euphonious nickname of "Porky," is to-day the hero of local patrons of the sport, and while it may be some time before he becomes a Jeffries, a Fitzsimmons, or even a Stanley Ketchel, he is headed that way, so watch for him.

Porky gained the approbation of 2,000 local fans and sent his name hurtling out into realms where it was heretofore unknown, by defeating Sailor Burke, a veteran fighter and the hero of a hundred ring battles, in twelve rounds of the fastest boxing which has been seen at the Armory A. A. since it first opened its doors.

Burke is right in his prime and has years of experience to Flynn's months. He has fought some of the best ring generals in the country, while the local boy's experience has been limited to bouts with prelim boys, such as himself has been considered, until within the past few weeks.

The Sailor has been credited with being a quitter, and columns have been printed about the large yellow streak that is supposed to be prominent in his composition. If he has the lemon tint it failed to show last night, and few who saw this bout or the one when Burke met Bill McKinnon, the Roxbury slugger, at the Armory last Spring, will believe he possesses it.

In the former bout the Sailor fought six rounds with his left arm broken and hanging limp and lifeless. In last night's mill he was up and at it every minute, and in spite of Flynn's terrific jabs and punches, which rocked his head time after time, he never showed a sign of a desire to quit.

It was a hair-line award that Flynn secured over the veteran fighter from Gotham who put up a most vicious battle from start to finish, and if the willingness alone counted in the final summing up, Burke would have won hands down. From the tap of the gong in the first round the hardy sailor was wading in at a furious rate, intent on getting Porky's goat at the outset, and went down the homestretch under full sail.

Flynn Good Marksman.

His aggressiveness got him into lots of trouble in the early rounds, as Flynn was a good marksman and picked him off as if he was shooting for a target, and simply measured the Sailor as he tore in, trying to batter Flynn to pieces by sheer force.

The kind of ring brand that the Sailor had on tap seemed to satisfy Flynn, as he shot over his left with unerring aim with Burke's head as the object of assault, and the ex-seaman had his lips jammed up against his teeth so often that they nearly stuck together.

Flynn, who was considered the under dog before hostilities began, made such a good showing that he got encouragement from all sides to put the Sailor away, but Burke knew his cards, and instead of standing off to give Flynn a chance to nail him, was in quick with both hands.

There was never any let-up in speed by the Sailor. He had Flynn backing in the last six rounds and fighting on the defensive most of the time. As soon as the referee pried them apart after each clinch the Sailor was in again, giving little heed to what Flynn had to offer, and he drove home some heavy shot into Porky's framework, but the Boston boy never wilted the least bit, and was always ready with a stinging wallop in either hand.

Flynn's long reach and awkward style had Burke guessing till he broke through the attack that Flynn used and got in close where he could do some execution, and kept Porky looking after his own welfare.

It was an even thing in the first preliminary, when Angus McDougal of Cambridge and Johnny Malla of South Boston lined up for six rounds, and a draw decision was well received.

Max Baker made short work of Young Dyson of Providence by putting him on the mat for the count in the second round.

Johnny Glover, who has been making good in New York, was paired with Young Nixon, and they went to a six-round draw, with Nixon showing the better qualities.

Round by Round.

ROUND ONE—The Sailor rushed with both hands and tried to sneak one over on the break and was cautioned. He came back with a left to the body. Flynn got within range and after a straight left flung over a right to the jaw which surprised Burke. Before the Sailor could recover he got the same medicine again. A left hook to the head caused Flynn's stock to boom. Just before the bell he missed a right but landed with a left to the head. Flynn's round.

ROUND TWO—At the bell Burke waded in but Flynn blocked. They mixed and Flynn reached with left to head. Burke rushed but got a left on the head. They went to swapping again with both hands and Flynn got under cover. The Sailor accounted with a straight left and got right to body as Flynn stepped in. Flynn led left to face and then swung right to jaw and Burke nearly went down. When the bell came they were hammering away with both hands but missed and it was a toss up. Flynn's round.

ROUND THREE—Flynn led left to head. The Sailor let go a right for the head. Flynn hooked with left to the body then shot over a straight left and uppercut with right. A straight left smash on the mouth stopped Burke up for a few seconds. Flynn again worked his left and right follow making Burke hang on to escape further trouble. Flynn repeated before the bell with left and right to head but there was not enough steam behind the wallops. Flynn's round.

ROUND FOUR—Flynn was the aggressor. He sent over a straight left to the head and banged with right on the jaw. The Sailor slammed in with right to body. Flynn countered with another left to the face and got his right to the mark as Burke came on. The Sailor kept falling into clinches with Flynn trying to catch him with a decisive punch and in the clinches kept jolting with both hands. Flynn's round.

ROUND FIVE—As the Sailor rushed Flynn tied him up. Burke was in again but could not land. He got furious and jumped at Flynn who stopped him with a well timed left to the jaw which hurt the Sailor. Flynn got in a couple of sturdy lefts to the body and went off his balance with Burke after him but Porky was too slippery. Flynn opened up and tried to reach with a left shift and landed on the body. Flynn's round.

ROUND SIX—Flynn was the first to count, getting left to head and scored again. Porky's left nearly stove Burke's throat in and he smacked the Sailor on the jaw with the same hand. In rushing Burke slipped down but was up like a flash, but Flynn hooked him with a left to the head as he got on his feet. Flynn stabbed with left and uppercut as Burke rushed. Flynn's round.

ROUND SEVEN—The Sailor fiddled around before he rushed and Flynn slipped to the mat when he rushed but was up quickly. There was no stopping Burke. He sailed in with right to body, then right to head, then uppercut with right while Flynn was busy blocking. It was going all Burke's way till near the gong when Flynn let go right and left. Burke's round.

ROUND EIGHT—Burke darted in with left hooks to the body. He got left to head and rushed, trying to put right to jaw. Flynn stalled and ducked under the swing. Twice Burke smashed on the face with his left. Burke opened up and forced Flynn to exchange with him getting a slight margin in the swapping. Twice Burke drove his right to the body and again let go his right for the head but missed. Burke's round.

ROUND ELEVEN—Burke went for the body with both hands. The pace was a trifle too fast for Flynn who had little offense to offer. Burke aimed for the body with rights and was having it his own way till Flynn suddenly slammed over his right to the jaw. Two hard rights to the body took some of the fight out of Flynn. Burke's round.

ROUND TWELVE—After the handshake Burke rushed landing with right and left on the body. They had a warm mixup wasting several haymakers, Flynn being the first to clinch. The Sailor was anxious to score decisively before the bell and worked his arms freely. He landed a right to the body and Flynn backed to the ropes. Burke put a couple of more rights on Flynn's midsection and tried for the jaw but missed. Burke's round.

NOTES AT THE RINGSIDE.

Flynn's victory was well received as Porky is a great favorite.

* * *

Tom Sharkey came over from New York. When he was introduced the Sailor said he was out of the game for good.

* * *

Jimmy Walsh was in Max Baker's corner and turned him a quick winner over a Providence lad.

* * *

Sam Langford got a great welcome. He said he hoped that his bout with Ketchell would come off as scheduled.

* * *

Johnny Glover used the famous pivot blow on Young Nixon, but it lacked only power.

* * *

When Dyson kissed the mat suddenly in second round of his bout with Baker, many were under the impression that he quit, as he made no effort to get on his feet.

WOLGAST MEETS MURPHY TO-NIGHT

PITTSBURG, Sept. 1.—Tommy Murphy and Ad Wolgast, the Milwaukee boxer, who has been doing excellent stunts in the pugilistic line, will meet for a six-round go before the National A. C. here to-night.

That the affair will be a hustling one from the start there is little question. Murphy has always been one of the East's fastest lightweights, and his clever two-handed work should be a puzzle for the Cream City boy.

Wolgast won fame by outpointing Battling Nelson at Los Angeles some months ago. He showed in New York against Owen Moran, being beaten in a somewhat disappointing go. He is a plugger and slugger, pure and simple.

NO RACING BUT RECEPTION FOR GERMANS

MARBLEHEAD, Sept. 1.—This is midsonder day at this harbor and although there is no racing there is much activity on board all the sonders and much work to be done on all of the six little racing yachts before the day is given up to the celebration in honor of the visiting German yachtsmen, who have travelled so many thousands of miles, and judging from the two races sailed have very little chance of winning the President Taft cup or getting a chance for the Governor Draper cup.

The rules of the international contest forbid the taking of the racing machines from the water, but everything possible without putting them on the runways is being done. Gangs of men worked on the rigging of all the boats during the morning and every rope, spar and hold was carefully inspected and put in proper shape for the third race which will be started at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Very little work was done on the American boats, for they have been going well enough to satisfy their owners and crew as the results of the two races prove, but there was a lot done to the German boats.

Yesterday was ideal Kiel weather, and the failure of the Germans to win in conditions supposed to favor them is generally considered enough to put them out of the real contest for the cups, which will likely be fought out in the three American boats with the Joyette the favorite.

This is going to be a lively day here, for never before have such arrangements been made to illuminate the harbor as it will be done to-night in honor of the German visitors.

During the afternoon all the boats in the harbor dressed ship and the picture was pretty, but to-night it will be better, as all the club houses will be illuminated and the houses along the shore will do the same, and a majority of the yachts will show all the lights they can carry while the Boston, Corinthian and Eastern Yacht Clubs will keep open house.

BASEBALL NOTES.

A critic, in sizing up the Boston Red Sox, remarks: "They are imbued with the proper college spirit." Who ever thought that a crowd of near "rah-rah" boys would come so close to winning a pennant?

* * *

Detroit fans are urging the management to get Larry Lajoie to play first base. Maybe a pitcher's life wouldn't be a miserable one if Lajoie, Sam Crawford and Ty Cobb all got going the same afternoon.

* * *

Lame arms among the pitchers are now as common as flies in a stable. There was a time when one pitcher was enough. Then came two for each club, and the number increased until clubs now carry eight and twelve and yet lame arms are more numerous than ever.

* * *

You have only to take a glance at the big league directory of 1904 to see the class of ball tossers who were stars with the majors that season who are now making good on the Powers circuit. The list follows: Hugh Duffy, manager; Bob Hall, Harry Wolverton, Phillies; Claude Ritchey, Pirates; Joe Kelley, manager, Cincinnati; Doc Casey, "Rabbit" Slagle, Wicker, Cubs; Dave Brain, Mike O'Neill, Byers, St. Louis Cardinals; Jack Cronin, Sammy Strang, Heine Batch, Brooklyn; "Iron Man" McGinnity, Dummy Taylor, Jack Dunn, Giants; Long John Anderson, Highlanders, and Ned Hanlon, manager, Brooklyn.

The AMERICAN has more circulation than all the other evening papers put together.

AMERICAN LEAGUE GROUNDS, Chicago, Sept. 1.—With the prospect of facing big Ed. Walsh this afternoon the Mack men were not any too confident of winning from the White Sox. But they gritted their teeth and in spite of the setback of yesterday went into the fray to-day with grim determination. Mack and his players were much disappointed that the Red Sox didn't take a fall out of the Tigers in their first game at Detroit. The race would then have been considerably tighter.

The White Sox are now after a permanent place in the first division. Next to the Detroits they have played the best of all the Western clubs lately.

The game today was booked to start fifteen minutes earlier than usual in order to allow the Athletics to get a train for Washington, where they play on Friday.

KENNEL NOTES.

Harry M. Delapole reports a fine litter of Airedales out of Lady Ribbons by Larchmere Flashwood; also a litter of Frenchmen by Jacqueminot out of Tootote.

* * *

The imported collie bitch Templand Torqueer, a winner at the last L. K. A. of Massachusetts show, has produced a fine litter of nine collies, sired by the imported Templans Thistle. This kennel has now added to its stock Parbold Penitent and one of her male brood. The bitch was imported by Lothrop Hedge.

* * *

The Bull Terrier Club of America will hold its annual October 2, with James Mortimer as the judge.

* * *

A. M. Tucker of Lexington has sent his bitch Weno to the Idahurst kennels to be bred to Buster.

* * *

Bessie, the cocker spaniel matron owned by N. N. Bliss of Beverly, has whelped a litter of seven to Idahurst Lecco. There are five dogs and two bitches in the litter.

* * *

Highly satisfied with the success of last season's event at Lenox announcement is made for the second annual to be held September 29. Some good animals are owned in that section of the country, and the committee are working to have a varied entry list. Good specials are offered and Harry Lacy will look the exhibits over.

* * *

Preparations are under way for the second annual show of the Framingham District Kennel Club. This year's event will be held September 22 at the South Middlesex agricultural show grounds. Arrangements have been made with M. F. Mulcahy to take charge of the Boston terriers, while Phil French, the Boston Airedale man, will look out for the interests of the latter breed.

* * *

Mrs. Asker of Boston has secured the Maltese terrier stud dog Dolly Boy. This little animal is the smallest of the sons of Chi Sonny Boy, and has been purchased from Mrs. Koerlein.

* * *

G. D. Tilley of Lawrence, who has recently been in England seeking stock, has returned with a good little bull pup. It is marked white and brindle and will be seen on the circuit.

GOOD GAMES AT LABOR DAY PICNIC

Father Callanan's Labor Day picnic, which will be held next Monday at Newton Lower Falls, will be on a larger scale than usual. In the evening a wrestling match between Farmer Burns, Jr., and Young Americus will take place. Entries are being received for the amateur vaudeville, for which $50 in prizes will be given. A tug-of-war match between six teams for $50 is being arranged, and entries close with Father P. H. Callanan next Sunday evening. The tug-of-war is open to any team in the State. The numerous regular attractions which have made the picnic a success in former years will be held.

MANGO BESTS MURRAY.

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—Frank Mango outpointed Chick Murray in their ten-round bout at Bill Brown's Gymnasium. From the first it was apparent that Mango was too clever for his adversary, and although Murray showed great ability to take punishment he was unable to make any headway against his opponent. In the semi-final Felix Leroy had the better of Jack White.

SOUTH END GROUNDS, Sept. 1.—With a double-header to be worked off on the green carpet and the right kind of weather on tap the fans spent their money freely to see the sport this afternoon.

Manager Clarke of the likely pennant winners had a fine corps of slab artists ready for the two battles. Manager Smith of the Doves also had a corpse of twirlers willing to do their best. For reasons of his own Manager Smith doesn't spell corps the same way Manager Clarke spells it.

"The loss of one game put us to the bad for the flag last year," said Manager Clarke, "and we are not going to take a chance this season that we can avoid. While we have a pretty good lead, we want to lengthen out the distance between us and our nearest rival, and from now on to the end of the schedule the boys will be at it every minute."

BOSTON PLAYER IS WINNER

CASINO COURTS, Newport, R. I., Sept. 1.—But one game was played here to-day in the tennis mixed doubles for the Harriman trophy, in which Rudolph Agassiz of Boston and Mrs. Barger-Wallach of Newport defeated Paulding Fosdick and Mrs. Arthur Scott Burden of Boston, 6—2, 6—2.

BENNETT PARK, DETROT, Sept. 1.—Determined to break the great winning streak of the Tigers, the Red Sox came on the field this afternoon with blood in their eyes. They don't mind getting beaten by the other clubs, but it is most exasperating to be downed by Messrs. Cobb, Crawford & Company.

Manager Lake resolved to send Eddie Cicotte to the rubber in his attempt to stall off the whirlwind opponents and all the boys back of the "knuckle-ball" artist promised to give him their very best support.

Jennings said before the game: "Well, I am breathing easier and while my team still has a rough road ahead of it, I am convinced that nothing can stop us. My boys are full of the right spirit and they play ball to win all the time. Unless luck goes against us to an alarming extent the pennant is ours again."

Lake's men were far from downcast. With a long series on home grounds they felt that they still had a mighty good chance to cop the flag.

MORE POWER TO PORKY FLYNN, the local youngster, who put the Indian sign on Sailor Burke last night at the Armory. Long may he wave. Only a few months ago the nineteen-year-old West End youngster was considered little more than a joke as a boxer. The only man he ever met who amounted to anything was Bill McKinnon, and Bill ain't such a much. Every man who saw Porky work last night will testify that he has learned a lot since he mussed up Bob Lee last April, and that he's a mighty game boy. With proper handling he should get up among the big ones in time and may eventually have a real press agent to boost along the game of a real world champion hailing from Boston. Who knows? By the way, I wonder how long a contract Jeff has on Sam Berger.

SPEAKING OF IMPROVEMENT IN boxers, did you notice the work of Max Baker, during the short time he had a chance to show it before he sent Young Dyson down for the count. To those who have watched this fast local youngster it was a revelation, and shows what can be done with a good boy in a short time by a really good boxer. Max has been under the tutelage of Jimmy Walsh recently and the result reflects no small credit on Boston's claimant for the bantam weight title. Young Baker is fit to meet almost any boy of his weight in the country, and any time he starts it's a safe bet he won't be running for the end book. To me he looks like the most promising little fellow hereabouts.

HERE IS ONE THAT PULLED A laugh last night at the Armory. Johnny Glover and Billy Nixon mixed in what proved to be a joke bout. While the boys were flailing about at each other and swatting the air like a pair of National League pitchers trying to hit an in-shoot, Always-There-Johnny Mooney called out.

"There's two out, Nixon, run on anything."

The crowd quit laughter at the boys long enough to have a hearty one with Mooney.

BARRY WHITE—YOUR BASEBALL problem is an old one and was pretty well thrashed out in the AMERICAN last Winter, when a contest was held on it. If my memory is not at fault six hits was the limit.

THE BASEBALL MAGAZINE FOR September is filled with interesting matter that cannot fail to appeal to the lovers of the great national game. Among the contributors to the number are Rankin of New York, Ted Sullivan, Dan Quinn, Fred Stone, the well known actor, of Montgomery and Stone; Sam Bernard, Edward M. Thierry, Arthur P. Young, R. B. Hawkins, Paul J. Feely, Harry V. Martin and R. B. Howard. The number is profusely illustrated, the cover containing a cartoon of the great "Honus" Wagner, while the frontispiece is a fine likeness of the former President of the National League, Harry Pulliam.

Will you kindly inform me in your sporting column how many games Carrigan and Donahue have caught this season, also how many players on the Boston American team that have played in major league company two years consecutively, or over. Yours truly,

Derry, N. H. CHAS. T. HANSON.

Carrigan has caught in seventy-six games and Donohue in forty-six. Stahl, Niles, Carrigan, Cicotte, Wagner and Gessler are not recent graduates from the minors.

Straight Dope, BOSTON AMERICAN:
Will you kindly let me know in the straight dope column why it is that when great men of the athletic world go down in one line of athletics they do not take up some other. Now, I am a Scotchman, and I was a great admirer of George Thinkler, the five-mile runner. Now Thinkler was a fast runner and the best we ever had at our picnics. Thinkler beat every one he ever raced at our picnics, and now I hear that he is down and out.

Well, I hear how fast Sam Langford is on the feet. Well, I never saw Langford fight, but I will bet that Thinkler is faster on his feet than Langford. I think that if someone would only get Thinkler in the ring he would whip Langford or Johnson. Oh, Thinkler was a very fast man on his feet, and if he could only be got to box we would soon have another white man champion of the world. I know something about the boxing game, as I used to know Ike Weir, the Belfast Spider, and Joe Mullins. Yours truly,
WILLIAM BAILY.

In a game of baseball with three men on bases and one man out, the batter strikes out and the catcher drops the third strike. The batter starts for first and the man on third for home. The catcher recovers the ball and touches home plate, then throws to first ahead of the batter. Is it a double play or is it only the batter out? Yours respectfully,
E. FLEURY.

Only the batter is out. There is a special rule covering this to prevent the catcher from purposely dropping the ball to force a double play.

JOHNSON HAS ALREADY SIGNED FOR 3 FIGHTS

By TAD.

Every aspiring heavy in the world who wants a crack at Jack Johnson's title will be accommodated if the Western clubs have dates enough. Upon his arrival in Frisco the other day Johnson stated that there was no one barred in the heavyweight elimination stakes and that the faster they came the better he'd like it.

Already he has signed to meet Al Kaufman, Jim Barry and Stanley Ketchel and he expects to hook up with two more before the day set for him to meet Ketchel, which is October 12. Whether the fight comes off or not the Westerners will have seen plenty of boxing by the champion. Big Bob Armstrong, who trained Ketchel out there, is now with Arthur across the bay and they've started to dig up the roads already.

The articles of the Kaufman fight call for ten rounds, and the decision is to be a draw if both men are on their feet at the close of the fight. Johnson had a taste of the referee business out West, and rather than risk his title with another limited bout he had the decision thing inserted.

Marvin Hart was handed a decision over him out there some years ago that was a disgrace. He hadn't one round in his favor, but in order to collect an old derby the club owner had the decision framed for Hart, and he got it.

Those decisions never did and never will do boxing any good. Johnson is right and extremely fair in asking for a draw if both are on their feet at the end. The sporting writers out there will judge the contest, and their decision will go. No one man who can be reached will have a hand in this.

* * *

Ketchel waited for the arrival of Jack Johnson in Frisco the other day, and then with Willus started a line of chin goods that would have made Tommy Burns in his prime look like a dummy. He said, in part:

The only way I can account for such a statement from Johnson is that he wants to save one of his race from a grand trimming. Johnson knows that I can lick Langford, and do it in jig-time, too. He also knows that there is no danger of the Portola match being injured by my trip to New York. If Jack thinks he can put the fear of the race in my heart by talking about Langford, he is mistaken. Now that I am assured Jeffries is not going to fight, I will shoulder the job of regaining the heavyweight championship for the Caucasian race—and Mr. Sam Langford is certainly not going to stop me from putting it over. The match at the Fairmount Club will probably be pulled off on September 15, after which I will scurry right back here and get ready for Johnson. He has a good trouncing coming, and I intend to be the one who gives it to him.

Haven't heard much from Jimma da Jeff or Sam Berger or any of the other agents lately. Where's all the fireworks and the threats and the forfeits? Was all that bunk for theatrical purposes or did it really mean fight? Oh, what Jimma da Jeff will do! Well, we're waiting, and Johnson says that Jimma da Jeff can cut the money any way he wants. Oh, you Jimma.

BOSTON AMERICAN'S DOUBLE

Riches of the Spirit Grow by Being Shared

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1909, by American-Journal-Examiner

HERE is a woman with beauty, wealth, social position and love to crown her life.

Motherhood was added, and the dreaded enemy to beauty appeared—obesity.

Then, after a time, we find our lady of beauty with all her loveliness restored. And she is in perfect health, too, and bounding with vitality.

When asked by her over-plump friends how she accomplished the transformation she shakes her head and says: "That is my secret. I was bright enough to find a method of reducing unneeded weight, and let others do the same."

Is not that a petty and pitiful spirit to show?

I am sorry for this woman. With all her blessings she can never know happiness, for the only real lasting happiness comes from giving whatsoever we have and sharing it with others who have not.

Unshared Wealth Lost

Any knowledge, any talent or wealth we possess and do not share with others is worse than lost.

Nothing belongs to us alone. Whatever is ours came from the great Source, and only as we use it to help our fellow-men can it prove to be a blessing to us.

The woman who withholds any knowledge from other women which would help them to retain or regain beauty, health, youth or success, that woman will not hold these possessions for long herself, however positive and scientific her knowledge or her methods.

Beauty of complexion and symmetry of form may be retained by the selfish and narrow-minded, but premature age will suggest itself in the mouth and eyes of the selfish woman, and a sharpness of feature and a hard expression will eventually ruin her beauty as surely as the formation of icicles on a tree branch will destroy the suggestion of Summer bloom.

Make Yourself Radium

It is the inner woman which betrays itself as the years pass. Oh, the pity of it, that women cannot realize the glory and happiness of sharing and giving.

Whatever you know, dear woman, that could possibly benefit another woman to know, whatever could give others an increase of health, strength, beauty, prosperity, success, power to do good or add to their attractiveness, do not fear to share it.

There will be no loss to you in this giving. You are yourself, and no one can be just like you. The rose is not robbed of any charm by having the same sun and rain fall upon the violet, and daisy and lily.

Radium loses no power by giving forth its wonderful warmth and light and healing qualities. Because of its marvelous ability to give forth, and ever to give and need no return of aught but the opportunity to give, the whole world is standing in wonder that is akin to reverence before this new element to-day.

Think of yourself as animate, intellectual, personified radium.

Whatever you possess that is helping you physically, mentally or spiritually share with humanity.

And just in the measure that you give shall more be given unto you.

Young-Man-Afraid-of-His-Wife

He Does a Little Shopping for Minnehaha

By Arthur Farland

"BILLY, what sense do you make out of this?" asked Young-Man-Afraid-Of-His-Wife, handing the "L" guard a leaf of note paper on which was written in hasty feminine scrawl:

1 pack invis hairp
3-13 yar ins to match sam
1 bot vi ex
1 piece baby rib
2 papers mix needl

Billy studied the cryptic characters with perplexed brows. "Search me, kiddo," he said. 'I never was no good at solvin' out puzzle gags. Looks like it might be directions to them cut-ups of the medical profesh, seein' how it says somethin' about a section of a baby's rib!"

"Nothing quite so barbarous as that, but a near relation," replied Young-Man-Afraid-Of-His-Wife. "It's merely a shopping list of the madam's which she handed to me yesterday morning as I was rushing off to work. I didn't have time to stop and ask for the key to it, so I spent two busy hours of the afternoon figuring out a solution. Here it is:

"1 package invisible hairpins.
"3 1-3 yards insertion to match sample.
"1 bottle violet extract.
"1 piece baby ribbon.
"2 papers mixed needles.

"I left the office three hours ahead of time, so as to allow myself plenty of margin, and made for one of those weird and complex institutions known as a department store. Having entered its portals and left hope behind, I edged up to the nearest floorwalker and asked to be directed to the hairpin department.

"Honest, Billy, they ought to furnish you with maps and an experienced guide when you start out to reach any definite point in a department store.

He Needed Plenty of Sand

"One half hour later, after many fruitless wanderings, I arrived at my destination, and it took all the sand I possessed to announce my business to the awe-inspiring and imposing Juno who presided at the counter. Fancy demanding mere hairpins from a human Statue of Liberty!

"However I crossed the Rubicon, and Juno followed up my lead by asking what kind of hairpins I wanted. I dove in my pocket for the madam's list, and (slow music for this, Billy) I—had—left—it—on—my—desk!

"I realized then how it feels to be electrocuted. 'Why—er—just name over a few of your styles,' I said in an elaborately offhand way.

"Juno was vigorously polishing her nails on the palm of her hand and didn't vouchsafe me even the most casual glance. 'Bone, wire, rubber, shell'—she started off, but in a sudden spurt of memory I interrupted what sounded like the reading of a stock market report.

"'The kind I want are the disappearing variety,' I said, brilliantly. She tore her eyes from her nails to give me one withering glance. 'Maybe you'll find what you're lookin' for at Danvers,' she flung at me. 'You'll be asking for lightning change kid curlers next, or a self-laying darning egg. Why don't you chop the fresh conversation and say what you're after?'

Tried to Get Needles

"Well, Billy, that made me sore on the hairpins, so I suggested to the peeved pippin that we compromise on needles. 'What number?' she asked, absorbed once more in the polishing process. 'Oh, about fifty of 'em, I suppose,' said I, carelessly. She again froze me with a glance. 'Say, you think you're awful smart, don't you? Are you afraid it will shock your system too much to cut out the kidding and talk like you had a common school education?'

"By that time I was desperate. 'Well, then, give me all the needles you have in stock,' I shouted recklessly, and honest, Billy, I never knew there was so much steel in the world. When she handed over the miniature imitation of the Ames building which represented my purchase I made the swiftest getaway I knew how, and as the only other item I could remember on that list was the extract I struck out for the perfume department.

"Arrived there, I confided my mission to a maiden with a spearmint flavor to her speech. 'What kind of extract do you want?' she asked.

"There it was again! Would this cross-questioning never end? 'Vanilla,' I ventured at a hazard, and with the passion for keeping me moving which seemed to consume everybody in the place she started me on a chase to the grocery department on the 'steenth floor.

"Billy, it would be well to draw the curtain on what happened when I got home and handed over the result of my 'shopping expedition to Minnehaha. 'My dear,' I explained, faintly, 'I forgot and left your list on my desk and these were the only items I could remember.'

"She undid the packages without a word, and after gazing at them in ominous silence for what seemed a century or so, she turned her attention to me.

"'What use do you suppose I have for a million needles, and what do you mean by bringing me vanilla extract when I distinctly wrote "violet"?'

Wise to the Sign Language

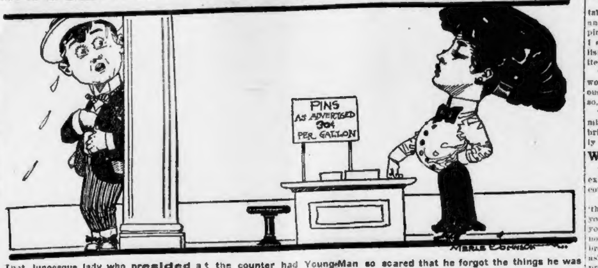
"'I remembered it was some sort of extract, and vanilla was the only kind I could think of,' I explained miserably.

"'Oh,' she said, with withering sarcasm, 'then it's a fortunate thing I didn't ask you to select the chicken for dinner, or you would have probably spent the afternoon on Tremont street looking over the broilers. And I'm quite sure, if I had asked you to get the pair of skates we promised your little nephew, you would have come home with a couple of your friends. The next time I want you to do any shopping for me, I'll do it myself!' and she flung out of my presence, leaving me cowed and wilted in the Morris chair."

"Well," commented Billy, "if that's the way a skirt writes up a shoppin' list, she oughtn't look for anybody but a deaf mute to understand it."

"Why?" asked Young-Man-Afraid-Of-His-Wife.

"Because," explained Billy, "that's the kind of guy that's wise to the sign language."



That Junoesque lady who presided at the counter had Young-Man so scared that he forgot the things he was to purchase.

Just Praise a Debt We Owe Our Fellows

By DOROTHY DIX

ONE of the strangest peculiarities of human nature is that we are all so quick to blame and so slow to praise. We do not hesitate for a minute to express our dissatisfaction at the acts of those about us, but we become tongue-tied and dumb when it comes to voicing any appreciation of the things that they have done rightly and well.

A husband accepts the patient sacrifices and administrations of his wife, year after year, without one word of acknowledgment. He sees her beauty burned out over kitchen stoves, preparing the dishes he likes. He sees her grown worn, and thin, and weary waiting upon him and his children.

He sees her bear bravely the thousand petty economies that women who are married to men who have more gift at money making than he has do not have to undergo, yet he never tells her how he appreciates her love, and loyalty, and that to him her faded face is a thousand times more beautiful than that of any young girl.

A wife will let her husband work himself to death for her and never give him the slightest sign of appreciation. She sees him, sick or well, weary or rested, Summer or Winter, plodding between his office or store and his home, with no let-up in the strain on him, no amusement, no diversion, nothing but a bending of the patient, brave shoulders to bear the load of responsibility that he has laid upon them.

Faults Are Discussed

She sees him the poorest dressed member of the family, the one that always stays at home when others go away; the one who gets the tough end of the steak, and the back of the chicken after everybody else is served at the table, but she never takes a day off to tell him that to her eyes he is the greatest hero in the world, and that she never thinks about being married to him without offering thanks to heaven for her luck.

Let Johnnie and Mamie come tumbling into the room like young hurricanes, and we cry out at their boorish manners, but we never say a word when they come in quietly like a little gentleman and lady.

Let the soup be too salty, or the roast burned, and we scold the cook in round terms, but she never hears from us on the days when everything is just right.

Yet, by our niggardliness in praise we default on one of the most sacred obligations in life, for when we withhold our appreciation we take away the sweet reward that robs labor and sacrifice of their bitterness.

There are debts that can only be repaid in love and praise.

Praise Lightens the Burden

Of course the husband and wife who are doing their duty by each other do not want any blaring of trumpets and beating of drums to celebrate the fact, but each would like to know that the other appreciated what he or she was doing, and didn't merely take everything for granted.

There would be no disgruntled wives, complaining of domestic slavery, and fewer roving husbands, wondering what a man burdens himself with a family for, if the supply of compliments wasn't so scarce in the ordinary household.

As for children, praise, and not blame, is the Archimidean lever with which alone you can raise them up to higher things. Praise kindles a child's ambition. Censure kills it. Continually tell a child that he is rough and bad and you will make a hoodlum of him. Compliment him for his fine manners and he will grow into a Chesterfield.

Once upon a time I knew a little boy who hated school and study. By some chance his mother discovered that he knew one single, solitary fact in history. She was clever enough to make a great exclamation over it, and even after she would ask him questions about historical events before company, prefacing her remark by saying, "You know Bobby is our historian." The result was that Bobby had to make good and was literally flattered into becoming a student.

It is certain that the servant question would not be as acute if we threw in a reasonable measure of appreciation with the wages that we pay our cooks and housemaids.

The round of domestic drudgery is dull and dreary at best, and it becomes doubly dull and dreary when one's best efforts meet with stony silence, and only one's failures call for comment.

Money Not Full Payment

Why should we grudge her meed of praise to the maid whose arrangement of the furniture makes our room beautiful, or to the cook whose skill is used to tickle our palates?

Why should we refrain from expressing our appreciation of his faithfulness to the coachman who can be depended on to come at our need at any hour of the day or night?

True we pay for their services, but they give us what money never fully pays, and that can only be liquidated in the coin that passes from heart to heart.

This is not only true as between servant and master, but between every employer and employe. Every employer owes it to an employe who serves him faithfully and acceptably to tell him or her so. The spoken word of appreciation is just as much a just debt as the pay envelope.

Praise is the cheapest thing in the world and the thing most needed. It is the oil that makes the wheel of life go around without creaking. Pity it is that every one does not lay in a more liberal supply.

THAT EMPTY GRAVE—Read this weirdly fascinating story in the SUNDAY AMERICAN.

The Manicure Lady Discourses on Married Folk and Boarding

"DO you think that married folks ought to board, George?" the Manicure Lady wanted to know.

"I never boarded since I was married, so I can't say," said the Head Barber. "I had enough of a boarding house life when I was a benedictine, or whatever they call it. Never again!"

"I don't think they oughta board, either. At least, not any longer than they can help. There is three married couples down to the Summer hotel where I spent my vacation, and there ain't one couple of them that gets along the way a married couple should.

"I don't think it's the men's fault, either. There was a Mister Frothingham there, one of the best fellows you ever saw, and not over thirty years old. His wife was about his age, but you would think that she was born years and years and years before him, the way she does the managing editor thing. It was 'Jack, you stay right here on this porch!' or 'Jack, how many cigars have you smoked this evening?' or 'Jack, I wish you wouldn't play the pianola when those giddy girls are two-stepping around the parlor!'

"You know as well as I do, George, that the only man who can stand that sort of nagging is a man with nothing but an Adam's apple for a chin, so once in a while Mister Frothingham, who is there with the old square jaw of one of them industry captains, used to sneak out while he was in the city and mix it up with the boys along the row.

"I ain't saying that he ever came home confused, but I happened to be on the train with him two or three times, and noticed that he smiled at all the little children when they was getting off at their station. That's a pretty good sign, George.

"Well, he would get home with the Christmas spirit sticking out a little, and then the other two married women would get after him. They would get a flash at him as he came up the steps and went to his room to greet the wife, and then one of them would say, 'Poor Missus Frothingham!' and the other would pull a long sigh and say, 'Yes, indeed!' Then they would bring up the heavy artillery.

"Then along would come Mister Jenkins, the husband of one of the other dames. Mister Jenkins is a peaceful sort of a guy, as far as I could ever see, but it seems that now and then he missed the five o'clock elevated and had to take the five-ten. The wife would give him one look and sail up stairs, closely followed by him, and then Missus Jasper, the only one left on the porch, would shake her head and tell one of the single girls, whichever one happened to be sitting near her, 'Please, my dear, don't marry until you think it over a long time.'

"After dinner the three couples would sit out on the porch for a few minutes to let their dinner settle, and then the old shot would commence flying thick and fast.

"Mister Frothingham would go out around to the corner drug store to get a cigar, and Mister Jenkins would stroll around to the same place to get his wife a headache powder, and Mister Jasper would go to sleep over in a corner. 'My husband never sleeps when he gets home,' Missus Frothingham would say. 'And it's a good thing he doesn't. He knows that I know what early drowsiness means.' 'My husband is safer sleeping on the porch than he would be sailing around with some men I might mention,' Missus Jasper would snap out. And then, George, they would jab and jolt each other, with words, until the husbands came back to the scene, when they would pair off and have it out singly, in their rooms."

"That's all old stuff," said the Head Barber. "Women will always act like that as long as there is summer hotels."

"But what I can't understand," said the Manicure Lady, "is that all the time them dames would be sticking the needles into each other, they would be calling each other 'dear.'"

"They are dear," declared the Head Barber. "All of 'em."

THE PERFUME OF THE LADY IN BLACK

CHAPTER X.—Continued.

When one entered the Square Tower by the only door one found himself in a large corridor which had previously formed a part of the guard room. The guard room had formerly taken up all the space and was shut in by walls of stone which still existed with their doors opening upon the other rooms of the Old Castle. It was Mrs. Arthur Rance who in this guard room had had wooden partitions raised to make quite a large room which she wished to use for a bathroom. This room, also, was now surrounded by the two passages at right angles to each other. The door of the room which served as the lodge of the Berniers was situated so that it was necessary to pass in front of this door to reach the only door affording admission to the apartment of the Darzacs. One or other of the Berniers was always in the lodge. And no one save themselves had a right to enter it. From this lodge one could easily see from a little window the door which opened off the suite of Old Bob. When M. and Mme. Darzac were not in their apartment, the only key which opened the door was in the keeping of the Berniers; and it was a special kind of key made purposely for the room within the last twenty-four hours in a place which no one but Rouletabille knew. The young reporter had let no one into the secret.

Edith Upholds Her Uncle.

Rouletabille would have wished that the watch which he had had placed upon the rooms of the Darzacs might have been kept also upon those of Old Bob, but the latter had opposed such an idea with an earnestness so comical that it was necessary to abandon it. Old Bob swore that he would not be treated like a prisoner and he said that on no account would he give up the privilege of going and coming to his own rooms when he saw fit without asking the keys from the lodge-keepers. His door must remain unlocked so that he might be to his bed chamber or to his sitting room in the Tower of Charles the Bold, without disturbing or worrying himself or any one else. On account of his insistence it was necessary to leave his door open. He demanded it and Mme. Edith upheld her uncle in so intense a manner and spoke so pertly to Rouletabille that he knew she was seeking to convey the idea that she believed that Rouletabille was treating Old Bob with discourtesy at the instigation of Professor Stangerson's daughter. So he had not insisted on what he believed to be best. Mme. Edith had said with her lips pressed together in a narrow little line: "But, M. Rouletabille, my uncle doesn't think that anyone is coming to carry him away!"

Rouletabille, after having politely inquired after the health of Mere Bernier, who was gathering up potatoes and putting them in a bag at her side, requested Pere Bernier to open the door of the Darzacs' room for us.

He did so now, as I stood there. When we at length passed into the sleeping room of Mme. Darzac, we were absolutely certain that we had left nothing behind us of which we did not know. As soon as we entered the room, Bernier, who had followed us, had taken care, as he always did, to draw the bolt which closed from the inside the only door by which the apartment communicated with the corridor.

Mme. Darzac's room was smaller than that of her husband. But it was bright and well lighted from the way that the windows were placed. As soon as we set foot over the threshold, I saw Rouletabille turn pale and he turned to me and said:

Perceived No Perfume.

"Sinclair, do you perceive the perfume of the Lady in Black?"

I did not. I perceived nothing at all. The window, barred, like all the others which looked out on the sea, was wide open and a light breeze rustled the hangings which had been drawn in front of a set of hooks for gowns which had been placed in one corner. The other corner was occupied by the bed. The hooks were placed so high that the gowns and peignoir which they held were covered by the hangings in front scarcely more than half way down, so that it would have been entirely out of the question for any person to conceal himself there without leaving his legs exposed to view from the knees to the feet. Nor would anyone have been able to hide in the corner where the portmanteaux and trunks were placed, although, nevertheless, Rouletabille examined it with the greatest care. There was no panel in this room. Toilet table, bureau, an easy chair, two other chairs, and the four walls between which there was no one but ourselves, as we could have sworn by all that we held most sacred.

Rouletabille, after having looked under the bed, gave the signal for departure and motioned us from the room. He lingered for a moment, but no longer. Bernier locked the door with the tiny key which he put in his inside pocket and tightly buttoned his coat over it. We made the tour of the corridors and also that of Old Bob's apartment, which consisted of a bedroom and sitting room as easy to examine and as incapable of hiding any one as those of the Darzacs. No one was in the suite, which was furnished rather carelessly, the chief article noticeable being an almost empty bookcase, with the doors standing open. When we left the room Mere Bernier brought up her chair and placed it on the threshold where she could see clearly and still go on with her work, which seemed to be always that of paring potatoes.

We entered the rooms occupied by the Berniers and found them like all the others. The other stories communicated with the ground floor by a little inner stairway which ascended to the summit of the tower. A trap door in the ceiling of the Berniers' room closed this stairway. Rouletabille asked for a hammer and nails and nailed up the trap door, thus making the stairway unusable.

An Ancient Tower.

It was about five minutes before 5 o'clock when, leaving Bernier in his corridor in front of the door of the Darzacs' room, Rouletabille and myself found ourselves again in the Court of the Bold.

At that moment we climbed to the platform of the ancient tower. We seated ourselves upon the parapet, our eyes looking down to the ground, attracted by the echoes of the Rochers Rouges. At that moment, we noticed upon the edge of the Barama Grande which opened its mysterious mouth in the flaming face of Baousse Raousse, the disturbed and wrathful countenance of Old Bob. His shadow was the only dark thing about. By what a prodigious anachronism it was that this modern scholar with his coat and hat in the height of fashion should be moving about, grotesque and ghoulish, in front of this cavern three hundred thousand years old formed by the ardent lava to serve as the first roof for the first family in the first days of the world! Why this sinister gravedigger in this beautiful corner of the earth? We could see him brandishing his skull as he had done at the table and we could hear him laugh—laugh—laugh!

From Old Bob our attention was drawn to M. Darzac, who was coming through the postern of the gardener and crossing the Court of the Bold. He did not see us. Ah, he was not laughing! Rouletabille felt the deepest pity for him for he saw that he was at the end of his endurance. In the afternoon he had said to my friend, who now repeated the words to me: "Eight days is too much! I do not believe I can bear this torment for eight days!"

"And where would you go?" Rouletabille had asked him.

"To Rome," he had replied. Evidently Professor Stangerson's daughter would accompany him nowhere else and Rouletabille believed that it was the idea that the Pope could arrange the affair which was driving him wild with grief that had put the journey to Rome into the mind of poor M. Darzac.

We followed him with our eyes to the door of the Square Tower. We could see from his looks that he could endure no more. His head was moodily bent toward the ground; his hands were in his pockets. He had the air of a man fatigued and disgusted with the whole world. M. Darzac a little after this gave me cause to experience the most frightful thrill of terror which could freeze human bones!

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

NO CAUSE FOR OFFENSE

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am thirty years of age. One year ago I met a young lady in a business way. She is about eleven years my junior. I became very fond of her. For several weeks we met daily, and it seemed to me she thought well of me. Then I left town. I cannot help thinking of her, and occasionally I send her post cards without her permission to do so. Did I offend by doing so? How could I apologize? And what is your opinion about our ages? Also, she is pretty well off, while I am getting $18 a week at present.

THANKFULLY.

IF the postal cards were not objectionable in any way, I do not see how she could be offended. Write and tell her that you are very much interested in her and ask her permission to correspond with her. The difference in your ages in not great enough to interfere with your happiness if you married. You are earning a good salary and probably will earn more as time goes on.

GIRL MAY BE SHY

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

A young man attends an evening company and has the pleasure of meeting a young lady whom he becomes attached to and likes very much. He accompanies this young lady home, but no invitation to call is extended, although the young man feels she would like very much to have him call. Now, would it be the young man's place to ask permission, in an instance of this kind, to call? If so, how should he approach her on the subject?

PERPLEXED.

IT is possible that the girl is shy, and I think you could tell her that you would like very much to call, and that would give her the chance to invite you. It is usually the girl's place to ask the man to call, but I think your case is unusual.

DO NOT TEASE HIM

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

A little over six months ago I became acquainted with a young gentleman. In the beginning I like him, and as time went on and my girl friends and I became more intimate with him I began to love him. I love him so dearly now I would give up anything in this world for him. A short time ago he became acquainted with a young lady. My friends and I have seen him of late quite often with her. We have teased him about his new lady friend and he has told us he cares for her only as a friend and nothing else.

It would break my heart, Miss Fairfax, if I did not win him. I would not separate anyone in the world, but could you not tell me some way of winning his love? I have never loved anybody and never will love anyone the way I love this one.

BROKENHEARTED.

DO not tease him about the other girl; it is in poor taste and will only make him dislike you. If you are cordial in your manner and natural and unaffected he will like and respect you. Do not run after him, and in time he may learn to care for you.

TURNED TO ACCOUNT.

May—Really, I don't feel like walking. My feet bother me a good deal.

Jack—Why, you must be nervous!

May—Nervous! Why?

Jack—Otherwise you wouldn't let such little things bother you!

Can You Tell This Boy's Age?

"WHAT might your name be, Johnny?" asked the Census Man.

"It might be Johnny, but it ain't," replied the kid.

"Just so," continued the C. M. "Who lives here?"

"I do," replied the kid.

"Will I find your folks out?"

"Perhaps you will; I am willing to give you a chance."

"Is your father living yet?"

"Not yet."

"Now to get down to business. What is your age?"

"That's impertinence, but I'll confide in you that the day I was born my father died and my brother was one-quarter the age of mother and my brother is one-third the age that my father would be were he alive. In twenty-five years more I will be the same age as was my father when he died. Now if you are a good deal smarter than you look you can figure out the desired information."

The Wanderers---By Arthur Symons

WANDERING, ever wandering,
Their eyelids freshened with the wind of the sea
Blown up the cliffs at sunset their cheeks cooled
With meditative shadows of hushed leaves
That have been drowsing in the woods all day.
And certain fires of sunrise in their eyes.

They wander, and the white roads under them
Crumble into fine dust behind their feet,
For they return not; life, a long white road,
Winds ever from the dark into the dark,
And they, as days, return not; they go on Forever with the traveling stars; the night
Curtains them, being wearied, and the dawn
Awakens them unwearied; they go on.
They know the winds of all the earth, they know
The dust of many highways, and the stones
Of cities set for landmarks on the road.
Theirs is the world, and all the glory of it;
The'rs, because they forgo it, passing on
Into the freedom of the elements;
Wandering, ever wandering,
Because life holds not anything so good
As to be free of yesterday, and bound
Toward a new-born to-morrow; and they go.
Into a world of unknown faces, waiting them.
Faces of friendly strangers, not the long
Intolerable monotony of friends.

The joy of earth is yours, O wanderers!
The only joy of the old earth, to wake
As each new dawn is patiently renewed,
With foreheads fresh against a fresh young sky.
To be a little further on the road,
A little nearer somewhere, some few steps
Advanced into the future, and removed
By some few counted milestones from the past;
God gives you this good gift, the only gift
That God, being repentant, has to give.

Wanderers, you have the sunrise and the stars;
And we, beneath our comfortable roofs,
Lamplight, and daily fire upon the hearth,
And four walls of a prison, and sure food,
But God has given you freedom, wanderers.

How Married Men Do Talk

THE married man laid down his paper with a sigh.

"There!" said the man's wife, with an approving smile. "How much nicer that is! You do like to please me sometimes, don't you?"

"Certainly," said the married man. "By all means. Decidedly. And now, what do we do?"

"Do?" echoed the man's wife. "Talk to me, of course. Here you've been gone all day, seeing people and doing things, and I've been sticking all alone in the house without a soul to say a word to me. Now, tell me what you've been doing all day."

"It wouldn't interest you," said the man.

"Of course it would interest me," said his wife. "Anything in the world would interest me."

"I caught the 8:12," began the man. "I didn't have a minute to spare, either. The bell was ringing and the gates falling just as I got to the station. I got into the smoker."

"You needn't tell me that. You came back in the smoker, too."

"Very true. Crichell invited me to join him and Jones and Phillips in a game of whist, which I did. We played two rubbers. Jones is a rotten player. We got in three minutes late, and I was a little late at the office. Miss Carmichael was wearing a bunch of sweet peas, but there were no other changes that I noticed. I ate a lunch, consisting of a hot roast beef sandwich at 1 o'clock. The beef was a little too much done."

"If you had been at home and the beef wasn't cooked right you would have raised the roof," said the wife. "What next?"

"I went back to the office and worked until 4:30," replied the married man. "Then I took my coat and hat from the pegs they occupied, put them on, and came back here on the 4:58. That's all, I think."

"It doesn't take a great deal to exhaust your conversational flow, does it?"

"Perhaps if you would allow me to run my eyes over the paper it might suggest some topic of mutual interest. Why not tell me what's been happening here?"

"Two of the sheets came home from the laundry quite badly scorched," said the man's wife. "The coal came this afternoon and the man shot it all over the cannel that we were keeping for the grates."

"That's too bad," observed the man, politely. "Anything else?"

"I believe that's all of particular importance," said the man's wife.

"Let's leave these grave matters and descend to the trivial and frivolous, then," suggested the married man. "Fire away!"

"You used to be able to talk to me," said the man's wife. "I can remember the time when you didn't seem to be at a loss for a subject."

"In those days I either talked about myself, which was egotistical, or about you," said the married man. "But whenever I talk about you now you seem to think I'm finding fault. Really, I don't mean to criticise. The little things I point out now and then are only meant——"

"Oh, take your old paper and read it."

Two Wedding Fetes Lead List of September

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

September weddings begin with two for the first day of the month, for this is the bridal day of Miss Edith Kendall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Ingersoll Kendall of Winchester, and James Runford Baldwin, and Miss Molly Feltham and Horace Hazelton Atwater. Miss Kendall is to be married in the Church of the Epiphany at Winchester this evening at 8 o'clock. After the ceremony there will be a reception at the home of the bride's parents on Stevens street. Miss Feltham's wedding will take place at her parents' home on Main street in South Brookfield, where the reception will also be held.

Another wedding of much local interest takes place on Saturday, September 4, when Miss Marian Willard Tyler, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Willard C. Tyler of Brookline, becomes the bride of James Ford of Cambridge in Longwood at noon. The ceremony will be performed in the Church of Our Saviour, and the rector of the church, the Rev. Reginald H. Howe, D. D., will officiate. Dr. Ford is the son of the late Andrew E. Ford of Clinton and belongs to the department of social ethics in Harvard University.

Two important weddings scheduled for next week are those of Miss Hope Hemenway, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Augustus Hemenway of Clarendon street, to John Richardson, Jr., Harvard '08, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Richardson of Chestnut Hill and Cohasset, and of Miss Eleanor Bacon Emmons, daughter of Nathaniel Emmons of Commonwealth avenue, and Dr. Channing Simmons, son of Mrs. Desire Despradelle of Commonwealth avenue. Miss Emmons's wedding will take place on Thursday, September 9, in the Emmons Summer home in Falmouth, and that of Miss Hemenway will come two days before and the ceremony will be performed in Christ Church, Hyde Park, by Bishop William Lawrence, an uncle of the bride. A reception will follow the ceremony at the Summer home of the bride's parents at Readville.

Miss Hemenway's wedding will be, perhaps, the most notable of the season, for the Hemenway connection is quite distinguished, including as it does the Lawrences, the Brookses, the Lorings and the Cunninghams.

To-morrow afternoon an interesting reception is to be held in Cambridge in honor of Sir Francis and Lady Campbell of London, who are here visiting the Charles F. Campbells of Harvard street. The reception will be held from 4 to 7 in the evening.

The Greatest Detective in the World

The Story of the Play, "Arsene Lupin," Now Being Presented by Charles Frohman in New York

Chapter II.

THE Duke of Charmerace looked in wild wonderment at the red chalk scrawl on the wall beneath the tapestry. Germaine and Sonia gazed at him, seemingly expecting the name to have some electrifying effect, as it always had on every member of the household.

"Arsene Lupin," he read aloud, wonderingly. "And who, pray, is Arsene Lupin, and what has that scrawl to do with the removal of my portrait?"

Germaine dropped the tapestry and returned to the tea table.

"Don't you know?" she asked in astonishment.

"No," the Duke assured her, amused at the awe in her voice. "I'm asking you."

"All France knows who Arsene Lupin is," Germaine protested.

"I have been away from France," the Duke reminded her.

"But we wrote to you all about it and sent you the newspapers, three years ago," Germaine said.

"My dear Germaine, three years ago I was wandering about, lost in the polar regions, and the mails there are somewhat irregular. Now, who is Arsene Lupin?"

Growing suddenly enthusiastic, as the romance of the life of the mysterious Lupin appealed to her, Germaine cried:

"Jacques, he is the most quizzical, the most daring, the most mysterious, the most fascinating man in France. And he is a burglar."

"A burglar!" the Duke laughed.

"Yes, a burglar," Germaine went on excitedly. "You know, after papa bought the chateau from you, so that you might have enough money to go on your silly hunt for the pole, it was decided not to remove any of these beautiful old portraits. Until three years ago they hung just as they are now, except that yours was where you last saw it.

"Three years ago papa got a letter. Oh, Sonia, look in the desk and bring out the portfolio marked 'Arsene Lupin.'"

"Great heavens!" the Duke said, laughing again, "do you keep a portfolio of the doings of this mysterious man?"

"Oh, yes, indeed. Find the letter, Sonia."

The Russian girl opened the portfolio, took out a sheet of double foolscap, written in a markedly peculiar hand and advanced with it quickly toward the Duke. Germaine interposed herself, taking the letter from Sonia and handing it to her fiance. His face showing profound amusement, he opened it and read aloud:

Arsene Lupin's Demands.

"'Sir—You have on the walls of your gallery at the Chateau a very fine Murillo, also a Rubens, which I desire to possess. There is also a Louis XIV. writing table, a buhl clock and a drawing room set.

"'In addition to these you have a tiara which you purchased at a recent sale and which was once owned by the unfortunate Princess of Lombard. Because of its tragic associations, and in part because of its intrinsic value, which, of course, should not be mentioned, I wish also to possess the tiara.

"'Kindly have the articles I have enumerated packed and shipped to me at the station at Batignolles. If you do not I shall do myself the honor to call for them at 1 o'clock on the night of Wednesday or Thursday.

"'Permit me to subscribe myself,

"'Yours with devotion,

"'ARSENE LUPIN.'"

Germaine grew quite excited during the reading of the letter, and Sonia, standing aloof by the desk, showed by her tense attitude and clasped hands how deeply interested she was. But the Duke could not repress his amusement. He burst into laughter, as he folded the letter and returned it to Germaine.

"And what did Monsieur Gournay-Martin do upon receipt of that astonishing document?" he asked.

"He posted off to Paris and showed it to the Commissary of Police," Germaine answered categorically.

"Who laughed at him and told him that his property would be protected," the Duke suplemented.

"Precisely," Germaine said. "But—Sonia, the dispatch."

They Found It No Joke.

Sonia took from the portfolio a telegraph form and handed it to the Duke. She felt a thrill as their fingers touched, and once more at the desk, with her back toward the others, she kissed her own hand that had been so casually caressed for a fleeting instant.

"The telegram came the day after papa went to Paris to communicate with the police," Germaine explained.

The Duke read again with amusement:

"'Sir—The articles have not been received at the station at Batignolles. Kindly have them ready for me at the time stated in my letter.

"'Devotedly yours,

"'ARSENE LUPIN."

"Why, this is a joke," the Duke declared. "A practical joke."

"But, indeed, it was not a joke," Germaine protested warmly. "Arsene Lupin kept his word. He always does."

"Did he have accomplices in the house?"

"Only one."

"A servant?"

"No, my father," Germaine said mysteriously.

"Oh, come," the Duke laughed. "Monsieur Gournay-Martin an accomplice of Arsene Lupin! What do you mean?"

"Just this," Germaine said, becoming almost tragic in her recital. "When papa received that telegram he was wild."

"I can picture it," the Duke interrupted.

Guerchard in the Case.

"We all rushed off to Paris to find Monsieur Guerchard, the chief of the secret police and the man who has been hunting Arsene Lupin for ten years. Guerchard was away on a vacation. We finally found him in the garden of a little house in Rheims planting tulips.

"This Monsieur Guerchard has a passion for flowers," Sonia interposed.

With a quick frown at the interruption of her narrative Germaine continued.

"Oh, he was angry and sent us to the four winds, about our own business, until we mentioned the name of Arsene Lupin. Then he became transformed. He forgot his tulips and went to work. He telegraphed to Paris for two of his most trusted men to meet him here, and they were all here that night when we got home. Oh, Sonia, will you ever forget the terror of that night?"

"Oh, never, Mademoiselle," the companion cried. "Those men with revolvers and lanterns. Oh, it was terrifying."

How Lupin Got the Treasure.

"But papa was confident," Germaine resumed, "and we all, including the servants, went to bed in the west wing and locked ourselves in. The night pased without a sound. The morning broke and we tiptoed down. There was not a soul in the house, and the things had been stolen."

"But Guerchard and his men!" the Duke exclaimed in amazement.

"My dear Jacques, it was a false Guerchard. It was Arsene Lupin himself, disguised as Guerchard. It was the false gardener whom we had left on guard, and he and his accomplices carted out the things at their leisure."

"And the tiara?"

"Oh, no, they didn't get the tiara. You see, that was not here. It was in the vaults of the Credit Lyonnaise. Papa took it with him to Paris and deposited it there for safety when he went to see the police."

"What a clever rascal!" said the Duke admiringly.

"Oh, there is no fathoming his cleverness!" Germaine cried. "He has a thousand disguises of the most intricate and elaborate sort. He goes everywhere. He dined twice in succession at the American Embassy."

"But if no one knows Lupin, how do you know that he dined there?"

"Because," Germaine said impressively, "after the guests went away the second time the Embassy plate was missing, and in its place was found Arsene Lupin's card. On it he had written:

"'This is not a theft; it is restitution. The value of the plate is exactly that of Mr. Morgan's French collection.'"

The Duke found Germaine's story tremendously amusing, and laughed in spite of her petulant protest that is had been a very serious matter. He strolled over toward the tapestry, near which Sonia stood at the piano.

Germaine Jealous of Sonia.

"But why should the redoubtable Arsene Lupin have coveted my poor portrait, since his taste in art seems otherwise excellent?" he asked.

"We never knew," Germaine replied. "It was not mentioned in the letter. But it was gone the next morning, and there in its place was his sinister autograph, just as it was on the walls from which the other pictures were taken."

From contemplation of the tapestry the Duke turned to Sonia beside the piano.

"Won't you be an angel, Mademoiselle Kritchnoff?" he asked suddenly.

"An angel!" she repeated, wonderingly.

"Yes, and play for me some Greig. I heard you this afternoon. No one plays Greig as you play him."

Joyously, with beating heart, Sonia seated herself at the piano, but before her fingers touched the ivory keys Germaine interposed icily:

"Mademoiselle Kritchnoff has her work to do, Jacques. Some other time."

Sonia drew quickly away from the table and returned to the desk and her task of mailing the wedding titices. The Duke, standing silently beside the piano, looked at her compassionately. Germaine grew suddenly ill-tempered and turned her back to him as the footman entered.

Germaine Becomes Nervous.

"Everything has been packed and sent to the station, mademoiselle," he said. "The servants leave for Paris by the 7 o'clock train. It is almost time for them to go."

"Very well," she answered.

Monsieur Gournay-Martin's town house had been left in charge of the caretaker, Victoire, an elderly woman, who had been in the family's service a year. It was there that the wedding was to take place. The servants were being sent ahead with the heavy baggage of the family to get the house in readiness. Monsieur Gournay-Martin, Germaine, the Duke, Sonia and the rest of the household were to follow the next day.

Germaine had been made nervous by her own story. She glanced over at the Duke beside the piano, and observed for the first time that a bronze statuette of Mercury, which ordinarily belonged on a centre table, was standing on one of the lamp racks of the piano. Wonderingly, she went over and took it up.

"Did you put that statuette here, Sonia?" she asked.

"No, Mademoiselle."

"I remember distinctly that when I went out to play tennis it was on the table," Germaine said, pressing a bell button for the footman.

"Alfred, was any one in the drawing room while we were out?" she asked when he appeared.

"No, Mademoiselle, no one; the servants have been in the other wing all afternoon getting ready to leave."

"That is all," she said, moving restlessly toward the door. There she gave a start and bent closely to look at the panes of glass.

"Why, Sonia Jacques!" she exclaimed. "Some one must have been here. See, here is a pane of glass broken, just above the catch."

His Plaint

By KENNETT HARRIS

I WANT to be down by the sea,
Where salty spray is blowing free,
Where perfumed gales swell snowy sails,
And where there is a dearth of males;
Where the proportion's one in ten.
Please tell me where they're short of men.

Or I would try the mountains high,
Whose pine-clad summits kiss the sky,
Where pretty flirts in Alpine skirts
Deal deadly wounds, then heal their hurts
But I must surely get there when
They happen to be short of men.

Or by the lakes for their sweet sakes
I'd stay and slaughter garter snakes,
I'd shed my coat and row a boat
Most willingly to shades remote;
I'd brave the woodchuck in his den,
Provided they were short of men.

A little dub they sort of rub
It into me with slight and snub;
And so you know I'll gladly go
Wherever I can get a show.
I do get even now and then,
But always where they're short of men.

The Usefulness of Sam

"I DON'T understand, myself, how you can have anything to do with him, much less like him," said the thin, serious man with the black string necktie. "You can apologize for his faults all you've a mind to, but—well, of course if he's a friend of yours"——

"Bless your heart! I'm not apologizing for him," said the man with the mutton-chop whiskers. "I know his faults just as well as you do—maybe a little better."

"How can you find any pleasure in his society?" asked the thin man. "He certainly hasn't any very original ideas."

"Very few people have, so far as that is concerned," said the man with the mutton-chop whiskers. "If I insisted on original ideas from every fellow I talked with I'd be mighty lonesome.

"Besides, I have a chance to give him a new point of view, and that's always worth while. I don't know any greater pleasure than to watch the dawning light of intelligence in a lack-lustre eye when you are elucidating something or other."

"I suppose I must try to conceal it, then," said the thin man. "I wasn't talking about his mental acquirements so much, though, as"—— The thin man paused.

"As his vices, I suppose you would say," supplied the man with mutton-chop whiskers. "You needn't hesitate. I know he gambles."

"He gambles, and for the means of gambling he deprives his own family," said the thin man severely. "Now, that's the sort of thing I can't condone. It may be uncharitable, but I've no use for a man who doesn't look after his family."

"I look after my family," said the man with the mutton-chop whiskers. "There are times, though, when I feel that I am not doing as well as I might by them.

"I indulge myself in certain little luxuries at the expense of their comfort, no doubt. I don't think you would ever hear them complain. As a matter of fact, I don't suppose they suspect it. But my conscience does and begins to operate its little stinger. When that happens I say to my conscience: 'Look at Sam and see what he does. Do I come within a hundred miles of being as mean as Sam?'

"'Well, perhaps not,' says my conscience. 'You'd certainly show up to great advantage by the side of Sam.'"

"There may be something in that, of course," admitted the thin man.

"When I think of Sam's shiftiness I get a great idea of my own honesty. When I consider the way he soaks I congratulate myself on my own sobriety, just as my insight and comprehensive grasp of a subject seem more uncommon after a half-hour's conversation with Sam.

"I may be feeling mighty small potatoes and few to the hill when Sam drops in on me, but by the time he has exposed a few of his most unamiable traits I swell visibly. I go away from him feeling my bosom glow with consciousness of virtue. If I catch sight of my reflection in a shop window I feel like taking off my hat to it."

"Of course, if it's on that account, it's different," said the thin man.

Opera

"I Shall Sing No More," Says Mme. Eames

By CHARLES HENRY MELTZER.

PARIS, Sept. 1.—On the fourth floor of an old-fashioned but attractive house in this city I found Mme. Emma Eames.

"This is to be my home in future," said she. "I have done with the stage. My valedictory was published in an American magazine. From now on I shall enjoy life in my own way, doing what I wish to do and devoting my thoughts to my own affairs.

"It is well, I think, that we should have some place to attach ourselves to. Till I took this apartment I hardly knew home life. The nearest approach to it was at the house which I once occupied in the Italian mountains. And there I was only a housekeeper. For, as you can understand, I was none too happy in it, and, to forget my boredom, I had streams of visitors, who kept me busy.

"I shall sing no more, unless—in a year or two, or later, if I have any voice left—I make one last concert tour in America. In that case I shall most certainly entrust my affairs to the two ladies who looked after them for me about three years ago.

Devoted to Poetry, Too.

"No, I have not sung since I left the stage. I was never interested in music so exclusively as some singers. At the outset, indeed, I studied only in order to have perfect control of my voice.

"Everything that is sincere and beautiful interests me. For instance, literature and philosophy."

"Marcus Aurelius? Oh, I read him when I was a girl of fifteen. Of late I have been more particularly busy with Carlyle. I love him and his style. There is nothing obscure to me in what you call his German English. It's quite clear to me, though I know very little German, and I have been dipping into parts of Dickens again. I never read the papers. There is not really so much news in the world worth reading.

After the unnaturally cramped life I led so long, it is delightful to have plain household affairs to think about. I shall enjoy even worrying about smoky chimneys. This little apartment is just what I wanted. I feel sure I shall like it.

"I have cancelled all my American engagements. There is not the slightest likelihood of my going over this year, or, I think, next. Possibly I shall go to China for a time. I was born there and I would like to revisit the country."

"Do you never regret what you have left behind you?" I asked.

Mme. Eames paused for at least six seconds before she answered. Not, I am sure, because she had any doubts as to her own mental attitude. Rather to savor, as it were, her own tenacity.

She Has No Regrets.

"I never allow myself to regret anything. What is the use? At every turn we are all called upon to take decisions. I allow my intuitions to settle matters for me. When I go out I have to decide whether I will take an auto or a taxi-cab. If I take the taxi-cab I shall forget the auto.

"There are two persons in me, I think. Perhaps three. One is a New Englander, and she is very strong. It's a long time since I saw New England. Yet I remember that I fitted quite naturally into the Bar Harbor social groove when I was there last.

"Will—my New England will has helped me to overcome many things. Six years ago, when I was down with nervous prostration, I did not succumb because I refused to do so. I just said to myself that I was determined to get well and enjoy my life. It took a great deal of New England will to pull me through, though.

"My books, my rooms, my friends, my household cares—there you have the beginning and end of my life as I see it. I have made no plans. We are apt to leave nothing to Providence. We act as if there were no God to care for us.

"Now I must run away and get my hat on. I have an appointment."

WHERE HE WAS

HE was one of those smart men who like to show their cleverness.

"Watch me take a rise out of him," he said, as the tramp approached. Then he listened solemnly to the tale of hard luck.

"That's the same old story you told me the last time you accosted me," he said when the vagrant had finished.

"Is it," was the answering question. "When did I tell it to you"

"Last week."

"Mebbe I did, mebbe I did," admitted the tramp. "I'd forgotten meeting you I was in prison all last week.

SAILED 1,800 MILES IN 20 FOOT YACHT

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—Members of the crew of a twenty foot auxiliary yacht, Old Glory, are at their desks in downtown business offices after concluding a journey of 1,800 miles on the Atlantic, sailing nearly all the way without a lifeboat and under the guidance of a twenty-one-year-old skipper.

The trip was to Digby, Nova Scotia, and return to the Horseshoe Harbor Yacht Club at Larchmont.

The yacht is 20 feet long on the water line, 32 feet on deck, has 10 feet beam, draws 20 inches of water, has a steel centreboard and 750 square feet of working canvass.

Starting at midnight August 9 from Larchmont the yacht had not been long on its journey when the twelve-foot tender astern turned turtle. Provisions and other property were lost.

At Digby the crew remained for twelve days. They spent this time in enjoying themselves fishing and attending picnics. The yacht had barely been in the harbor of Digby twelve hours when a northeast storm broke that drove every vessel along the coast to shelter. In Digby scores of fishing boats went down. Had the Old Glory been caught in that storm without a life boat it would have probably sank with all on board, the captain said last night.

CRANE VISITS DRAPER; GUESS!

United States Senator Winthrop Murray Crane called on Governor Draper at the State House.

That much is public information.

Did Senator Crane and Governor Draper talk about the income tax?

Did they plan for the defeat of the Income Tax resolution by the next Legislature?

The answers are known only to Messrs. Crane and Draper.

Some folks say they did. Merely a guess.

Others say they didn't. This from loyal Republicans who are never guilty of lese majeste.

And others—also guessers, but usually pretty good guessers—say that the fate of the income tax resolution in Massachusetts has been settled already, and that Crane-Draper conferences will not change the program.

2,000 DRIVEN TO HUNGER BY MILL STRIKE

SACO, Me., Sept. 1.—One hundred and fifty striking weavers of the York Manufacturing Company's mills here continue to hold out for a four cents per cut advance and a settlement seems as far off as it did on August 25, when the strike began.

Two thousand men, women and children, who want to work and who profess to have no grievance, are suffering because the York mills cannot run without weavers. Starvation confronts those who remain here, unless the mills open soon.

Report New Strike.

It is said that the weavers in the Pepper- two weeks of manoeuvres and target prac- are dissatisfied with their wages and are preparing to go out on strike. Some of the weavers are known to have held meetings recently and to have appointed committees to demand an increase. The officials of the Pepperell Mills deny that they know anything about it.

Large numbers of idle operatives are camping in the woods near here and at the mouth of the Saco River. The wood dwellers are living on wild berries and garden truck, foraged from formers' gardens. At the river mouth clams are the main supply.

The weavers complained that their former average wage of $24 every two weeks was cut down to $20 through the introduction of automatic looms. The 4-cent increase will enable them to earn their former wages, they say.

Seek Mill Agent in Vain.

Agent Elmer E. Page, in charge of the York Mills, went away on vacation when the strike began. He is still away. His last word was: "They'll return at the old schedule or not at all."

Officers of the National Loom Fixers' Union have tried to locate Mr. Page without success. The local strike committee has been unable to find him. A conference with him seems unlikely before next Tuesday or Wednesday.

LEWIS IGNORES MINERS' LEADER

PITTSBURG, Sept. 1.—National President Thomas L. Lewis of the United Mine Workers of America has taken full charge of the dispute between local miners and operators over the use of a new explosive which the State Mining Department has instructed the operators to use. Hereafter the national organization will deal with the operators direct and will not consult with Francis Feehan, president of District No. 5, the Pittsburg Union.

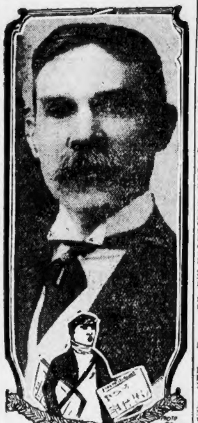
LYMAN HOWE GIVES STIRRING VIEWS OF GREAT DISASTER



"The Destruction of Hyderabad, India," one of the feature subjects on the Travel Festival programme of Lyman H. Howe at Tremont Temple this week, is considered about the most thrilling set of views that patrons of Mr. Howe's lectures have ever seen. It shows the appalling tragedies of this disaster, which cost 40,000 lives and $75,000,000 worth of property.

The value of the views is all the more evident when it is known that they were obtained by Mr. Howe under great difficulty. He had special permission from the Nizam of Hyderabad, hereditary ruler of that Indian State, to get them, but, at that, he encountered many obstacles.

The world in general is included in views of Mexico, of the Fountains at Versailles and of other scenes.

To-morrow and Friday nights the Boston newsboys, as guests of the BOSTON AMERICAN, will attend the Travel Festival. The "newsies" are keen observers and are looking forward eagerly to seeing what Mr. Howe will offer them.

TODAY'S STOCK MARKETS: FINANCIAL NEWS

CENTENNIAL UP THREE POINTS

STATE STREET, Sept. 1.—Centennial and Allouez mining furnished the forenoon features in the local stock market. The former rose firm a closing bid at 38 last night to 41½, with a slight setback, and the latter from 47 bid last night to sales at 50. There was no news account announcing these advances, but the floating stock of either company is comparatively small and any demand causes a substantial advance.

The market otherwise than this was dull, although a firm tone prevailed in the mining share list. Lake Copper was given 1½ point boost to 37, reacting a point subsequently. U. S. Smelting continued an active feature above 57, and is being manipulated for higher prices. North Butte was quiet at 61⅛ and 61½ and Amalgamated was just under 84. American Telephone held yesterday's advance well.

August exports of copper were light, being 22,839 tons, which is 12,207 tons under those for July.

Curb trading was light and outside of the decline in Champion to 16 cents was featureless.

U. P. LEADS STOCK RALLY

By THOMAS C. SHOTWELL.

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—After a weak opening, the stock market rallied to-day under leadership of Steel and Union Pacific. London sent lower prices for the leading stocks and the home securities in that market were also lower. Trading in both foreign and American markets were on a very light scale.

The quieting down of the market has caused a renewal of reports of very important financing to be put through in the near future. It is known that Mr. Harriman plans to bring out the greatest railroad deal in the history of America. It involves the New York Central, the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific. It is not a plan of segregation but a large issue of bonds will be made in connection with it, and the preferred stockholders of Union Pacific expect to have the right to subscribe for these bonds along with the common.

The Rock Island system reported an increase of net revenue for July amounting to $601,476. The business on that system is now large enough to justify dividends on the preferred stock, officials of the company say. On the curb market trading was very dull.

AUNT, WEIGHT 300, WEDS NEPHEW, 110

PITTSFIELD, Sept. 1.—Mrs. Adaline Rucks, proprietor of a hotel in Wachita Falls, Texas, and rated in Bradstreet's for $350,000, is on her honeymoon with her third husband, who was Eli Belanger of North Adams, her nephew. Mrs. Belanger is fifty years old and weighs about 300 pounds. Her husband, who is her junior by several years, weighs about 110.

They were married after many difficulties had been encountered.

After visiting several clergymen they finally prevailed upon the Rev. J. A. Hamilton, who did not know the groom-elect was Mrs. Ruck's nephew, to marry them.

TORPEDO FLOTILLA IN OCEAN RACE

NEWPORT, R. I., Sept. 1.—The Atlantic torpedo flotilla sailed for Norfolk and later will join the Atlantic fleet for the Hudson-Fulton celebration. On the run to Norfolk the boats will race part of the way at full speed. The body of Seaman Thomas V. Crank of Dennison, Tex., attached to the torpedo boat Worden, who was drowned in Gardiner's Bay last Friday, has not been recovered. The first submarine flotilla with the parent ship Castine and the torpedo cruiser Montgomery have gone to Narragansett Bay for two weeks of maneuvres and target practice.

CZAR SUPPRESSES IMPERIAL COUNCIL

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 1.—An imperial ukase countersigned by Minister of War Soukhomlinoff suppresses the council of imperial defence created June 21, 1905. The presidency of Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholaevitch and the membership of two other grand dukes made the council a powerful instrument of government, to which the ministers of war and marine and even the ministers of the cabinet frequently had to bow. Its suppression amounts to a substantial victory for the Stolypin cabinet.

ASTOR ESTATE GETS BIG CUT IN TAXES

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—William Waldorf Astor, one of New York's wealthiest real estate owners, has succeeded in "swearing off" the assessment upon nearly a million dollars worth of his properay in this city, according to the reports out to-day. The amount which the Commissioners of Assessment and the Corporation Counsel have reduced the assesment upon his holdings, as the result of protest made by him during the past four years, is $983,-900.

PAY $2,500,000 FOR ELEVEN PAINTINGS

PARIS, Sept. 1.—The Duveen Brothers, art dealers, with a house on Fifth avenue, New York, have bought a portion of the famous art collection of the late Maurice Kann for $2,500,000.

The price paid is a remarkable one, as the collection comprises only eleven masterpieces and a set of decorative panels by Francis Boucher and a number of smaller objects of art.

EXPLOSION TOSSES AUTOISTS IN AIR

MAGNOLIA, Sept. 1.—An explosion of a gasolene tank on a rapidly speeding auto threw Harry Hooper and a companion over a fence into a nearby field. Before the fire department could reach the scene the $2,000 machine, which was owned by Hooper, was destroyed. The accident happened within sight of scores of people. Neither man was hurt beyond bruises.

WALL ST. NEWS FOR INVESTORS

WALL STREET, New York, Sept. 1.—Some of the largest interests in Wall Street say they are in favor of a quiet market for some time to come, but it remains to be seen whether their wish in the matter will be gratified. If it is, there will be something of a departure from precedent. The conservative interests generally like a quiet market after a period of disturbance, but when the disturbance, as in this case, has resulted in improving the technical position, the probability is that large speculators will get busy on the bull side and that as a result Wall Street will witness considerable activity.

Southern Pacific's report for June and twelve months ended June 30, 1909, is its own commentary on the reserve power possessed by these lines in periods of business depression and the resultant economies which must necessarily be put in force at times when earnings are showing tremendous declines.

Gross earnings for the year ended June 30, 1909, shows a reduction of $2,700,000 from the figures reported in 1908 and $5,600,000 under the record established in the year 1907. But in the face of this reduction in gross, operating expenses have been reduced no less than $8,860,000, making it possible to show an increase in net of $6,100,000 over 1908 and only $1,200,000 under the figures reported in 1907.

This large decrease in operating expenses forcibly demonstrates the remarkable reserve power possessed by the Southern Pacific. And not the least interesting feature is this, that more than half of the economies effected occurred in traffic and transportation expenses, this item showing a decrease of approximately $5,000,000 while maintenance of way and structure was decreased $3,000,000 and equipment $500,000.

The most conspicuous of the new issues brought forward on the bull side is American Telegraph & Telephone, which on large transactions has maintained a uniform advance, attracting favorable notice in conservative quarters. It is quite generally conceded that there is basis for the rise in the heretofore neglected merits of the stock, this issue selling on a basis where its dividend yields much more on the purchase price than is yielded by any other stock of anything like similar merit now before the public.

A revival of the rumor of a consolidation of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company and Western Union Telegraph was caused by the simultaneous strength in the stocks of these companies, but in well-informed quarters the story is said to contain no more truth than at any other time when it was circulated in the past ten years. It is intimated in some places that perhaps a better explanation of the rise in the stocks could be found in the possibility of a settlement of the long standing litigation involving claims of the Western Union, under an agreement made about thirty years ago when this company retired from the telephone field.

Steel is again market leader. The Trust is earning at the rate of about $160,000,000 net yearly according to a statistician whose figures in the past have proved reliable. It is doing one per cent. more business than it did in the greatest boom times. The independents are all filled to their capacity. It develops that some of the railroad equipment companies were so anxious to get orders that they find themselves filled with business on which there is small profit. In some cases they neglected to get contracts with the steel companies for raw material, and the railroads will get the finished product for about what it cost. This is a bull argument on railroads, but perhaps some of the railroad equipment stocks are a trifle too high. The American Car & Foundry Co. is one that has a safe margin of profit.

American Smelting & Refining is heavy, a condition not unnatural in vew of the stock's strength last week, when the rest of the market was unsettled. A weak bull account was created then, which may now be in process of elimination, and, as one trader expressed it, "The insiders allowed the Street to hold the baby, while they watched the course of events."

A sharp advance in Louisville & Nashville, almost on the eve of the publication of the cotton report, showed that while the condition is expected to be low the prosperity of the South is not dependent upon the crop and may be as great as if the yield was of full average quality.

Sales of copper have been recorded at 13¾ and 13¼ cents a pound. The United Metals Selling Company is quoting copper at 13¾ cents a pound. The smaller dealers are not inclined to cut prices more than ⅛ cents from this level. Several weeks ago sales of copper were made by the independents ¼ cent below the price quoted by their large competitor.

One large producer estimates that sales of copper for the month of August will run in excess of 100,000,000 pounds. The United Metals Selling Company is understood to have sold nearly 70,000,000 pounds in August.

BARITONE BERGER TRIUMPHANT TENOR

BERLIN, Sept. 1.—Berlin enjoyed a first-class musical sensation last night when the Austrian singer, Rudolf Berger, formerly one of the baritones of the Kaiser's Royal Opera, made his debut as a full-blown tenor in "Lohengrin." Oscar Saenger, the New York singing master, told him he had the making of a legitimate tenor in him. Berger went to New York and placed himself in Saenger's hands, with the result that he made a triumphant re-entry into the favor of the Berlin opera public.

ST. LOUIS GIRL IS BRIDE AT RYE BEACH

RYE BEACH, N. H., Sept. 1.—In the beautiful little forest embowered church of the aristocratic St. Andrews by the Sea congregation, the wedding of Miss Marjorie Thornburgh of St. Louis and John H. Holliday of the same city, for which the social season here has been prolonged, is solemnized this afternoon. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Stribling of St. Louis, who are among the city's highest of the socially elect. The groom, Mr. Holliday, is one of the most prominent and popular young club men in the middle West.

PRAYER PEDDLER PUT UNDER BOND

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Sept. 1.—Charged with annoying mourners in Washington cemetery, by offering to pray for dead members of their families—if he was paid—Philip Jacobs, fifty-one, of No. 129 Belmont avenue, was arraigned in the Flatbush court and put under $5,000 bond. "For months," said Superintendent Grosner, "this fellow has been annoying mourners at graves. He had a regular scale of prices."

Do you want to become interested in a rich copper property under especially favorable circumstances? If so send your name and address and I will put the proposition before you in detail. This is a Boston enterprise and will be handled by reputable Boston people. B 457, Boston American.

The Fly DOES Wipe His Feet---Unfortunately

That Is the Worst Thing About Him. This Is the Most Important Time TO PUT IN FLY SCREENS

Copyright, 1909, by American-Journal-Examiner

If you have doors or windows without screens, in the city or in the country, put the fly screens in now AND KEEP THE FLIES OUT.

The fly is the great spreader of disease, one of the greatest enemies of humanity, and one of the most dangerous. Many people put in their fly screens early in the Spring, or if they neglect it then they let the neglect continue, waiting for the next Spring.

As a matter of fact, the fly screens that keep out the dangerous insects and the disease germs that these insects wipe from their feet on your food are most important now in the Fall of the year.

During the Summer the flies in their millions can exist out of doors. The first cold weather drives them in; they swarm through windows and doors, their feet laden with germs from the filth that they have frequented.

In September and October fly screens are at least as important as in any other season of the year. GET YOUR FLY SCREENS IF YOU HAVE NEGLECTED DOING SO, AND GET YOUR FLYPAPER AND OTHER DEVICES FOR DESTROYING THE FLIES NOW.

Those that are waging war on the flies—a most useful and important war—speak of the fly as the fly that "will not wipe his feet." It is a good enough phrase to attract attention, but unfortunately the fly DOES wipe his feet. He wipes his feet on the food that you eat, on the faces and on the lips of your sleeping children. He is a frequenter of offal—the female fly lays her eggs in the manure piles. The flies in millions settle on the refuse, the sewage that washes up along the beaches, along the water's edge in great cities. All the germs, all imaginable, horrible microbes fasten themselves to the spongy feet of the fly, and the fly brings the germs into the house and there WIPES THEM OFF HIS FEET. And that does more to spread typhoid than any other cause.

How often have you seen the fly standing on a lump of sugar in the sugar bowl industriously wiping his front feet? He is wiping off the disease germs, rubbing them on the sugar that you are going to eat.

AND ONLY THE FOOL IGNORES THE DANGER THAT THERE IS IN THIS. There is no longer any talk about "disease germ nonsense." Too many have learned, to their cost, that the microscopic germ, invisible to our eyes, is the germ that builds the monuments in our graveyards.

Mothers and fathers must accept the statements of scientific men. It is proved absolutely that the typhoid that kills so many children and grown up human beings is the disease that flies spread, just as yellow fever and malaria are diseases spread by the mosquito, and ONLY BY THE MOSQUITO.

The fly, too, spreads innumerable other diseases. One of the worst of these is myopia, a dreadful disease of the eyes, resulting in blindness.

In Egypt you can see the unfortunate little children, blind almost from their birth, defenseless against the flies that swarm around their eyes.

At the ports of America vigilance is exercised, and all cases of contagious eye disease are turned away. The same vigilance should be exercised in the case of the fly, that applies for entrance at your door or window. The fly that you see on the face of your child now may, half an hour or an hour since, have been on the face of some child with diseased eyes. You would shudder with horror if you saw a sore-eyed child playing with your own child. But there would be infinitely less danger in that than in the visits of flies whose feet have been you know not where.

Long ago we pointed out in this column that the important work of humanity in the future would be fighting not the big, monstrous animals, as in the past, but the little enemies, and especially the invisible enemies. Men must kill off their small enemies—the rats that spread the bubonic plague and other diseases; the flies, the mosquitoes—they are the relatively BIG ENEMIES. And, after fighting them, they must fight the microscopic, invisible germs, more dangerous still.

Keep OUT the flies, keep out the mosquitoes. Put up your fly screens now, if you haven't them up ALREADY. It is very simple to close up every door with a wire screen that shuts itself with a spring, and to shut out the insects with screens on the windows.

Fortunately, the disease germs themselves do not fly. They could pass through the screen as easily as through an open doorway. They reach your children only when larger insects bring them and spread them.

Keep out the bigger insects—the flies, the mosquitoes—and you keep out the invisible, deadly enemies.

There is more health in a house well screened against insects than in many a doctor's visit.

LETTERS FROM AMERICAN READERS

NEWSBOYS' HOUSE

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

The new Newsboys' House for the newsboys of Boston is one of the finest contributions that those interested in its conception could make. It will be successful because it cannot fail, for with the enterprising and ever-alert newsboys behind it, how can it fail? Such a place will add greatly to the well-being of a rising manhood from among which will come forth some of the great men of the future.

MAX HENRY NEWMAN.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE?

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

People everywhere are shocked at the news from McKees Rocks giving accounts of rioting and death at the works of the Pressed Steel Car Company. Of course, the poor devils who are shut out by the giant corporation are held responsible for the trouble and are generally condemned by the public.

Does anybody ever stop to ask who is responsible for the cheap labor being imported into the country, and why the corporations employ them in preference to American skilled labor? They employ this kind of labor because they can get it cheaper and can impose upon them indignities and then when they rebel and go out on strike these virtuous gentlemen call upon and expect the authorities to protect them.

It is about time the Government took up such matters and investigated conditions, with the idea of enforcing arbitration instead of force of arms. The Government of to-day is too much Harrimanized, like everything else. It caters too much to Wall street and the money powers to see that justice is dealt out to its subjects and to those who are allowed to come in under its laws. The Constitution is null and void, trampled under foot by these captains of industry. I am an American, but to-day am ashamed of my country. J. C. S.

WANTS TO SET TYPE

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

I am a young woman, and am very anxious to find out a little information from you. I am and have been a constant reader of this paper for years, and thought you would be just the party to aid me in this information.

"Is there a place of business or where can a young woman learn or be taught how to set up straight matter or type in a printing office for printing."

DR. PARKHURST'S ARTICLE —ON— PROPERTY

Written for the Boston American.

By DR. C. H. PARKHURST

Copyright, 1909, by American-Journal-Examiner.

HOW much property has a man the right to possess? As much as he can acquire without trespassing upon the rights of others.

Money-making is a business, and the faculty for making it is genius, and, like every other species of genius, to be respected and made the most of.

A person possessed of this genius has the same warrant for multiplying his dollars that an architect has for adding to the number of buildings he constructs, provided they are constructed thoroughly and honestly; that an artist has in adding to the number of his paintings, provided they are not questionable in their character nor slovenly in their execution; that a preacher has in going on year after year producing sermons, if only those sermons are faithful to the truth and respectably composed.

Exercising unstintedly the privilege of earning, of course, results in tremendous financial inequalities, and never so much as in this present generation. Some are so poor as to find no burial place outside of the Potter's Field, and it is said that the fortunes of some are approaching the billion-dollar figure. Between the two the range is enormous.

But inequality is a part of life in every particular, no more in matters of money than in any other respect; and it is well that it is so. A good deal of the practical value to us of the natural world lies in its unevenness.

Too Heavy Task for Moderate Circumstances

The Sahara desert is flat and there is consequently nothing to be said of it. If there is nobody well to the fore, everybody will be well behind. A distribution of goods per capita would undo the results and the progress of forty centuries.

And once grant the necessity and the advantage of financial inequality and it is out of the question to draw an arbitrary line beyond which such inequality shall not be allowed to extend.

There is under consideration the question of so amending the Constitution as to admit of the assessment of an income tax. But it is a mistake to conceive of such amendment as a means of discouraging large accumulations rather than simply a just method of requiring men to support the Government according to their several ability. Too much of the weight of the yoke rests at present upon the necks of those in moderate circumstances. We are more indebted than is sometimes realized to large accumulations of money held in the hands of single individuals. It has not been by "passing the hat" that funds have been procured for carrying out the projects that constitute s large a feature of the twentieth centur civilization.

Th laying of the Atlantic cable was n rendered possible by any scheme of "penn contributions." Cyrus Field did not fin many that expectantly sympathized wit him in his splendid enterprise, and if h had not had large resources of his own th undergirding of the Atlantic would hav had to wait till some later Cyrus Fiel should arise who also had large resource of his own.

So of our vast railroad enterprises. S of our hospital endowments, and our co lege and university foundations. Ever student in all our higher institutions o learning is a beneficiary. Students' fees g only a short way toward meeting the running expenses of such institutions. Th members of the teaching staff are paid ou of the income from gifts made by men wh accumulated big fortunes and who were enabled thereby to help men of ordinary means to secure an education that they could never themselves have paid for.

Goodness and Badness Not in Things, but in Their Use

The world is dotted all over with the beneficences of men who knew how to make money, and who made a great deal of it, and who had no arbitrary stop put to their efforts to keep on making it.

We become so accustomed to the benefits and amenities that have come into our lives in this way as to be almost unconscious of the enrichment that they are to us, and forgetful of the fact that we owe them to men whom, in our haste and perhaps in our poverty, we sometimes stigmatize as plutocrats.

These paragraphs have considered only one side of the question. There is another side, and an exceedingly serious one and which will require to be taken up later. Only we must always be careful to discriminate between things that differ and, to use the illustration of Scripture, not tear up the tares lest with them we tear up the wheat.

Goodness and badness are not in things, but in their use. Water is good when we use it to quench our thirst, but bad when we get into it above our necks.

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

PA bought a canoe yesterday. Ma was mad at him beekaus he bought it. In the first place, sed Ma, the canoe cost thirty dollars & I cud have bought me a new dress for thirty dollars, & in the second place, you will be fooling away yure time in that canoe wen you mite be taking me to Winthrop or Salem, and in the third place, you mite git drowned.

But Pa didn't cair wat Ma sed, beekaus he was looking at the canoe wile Ma was scolding him. Aint it a buty? sed Pa, look at them swell lines. Thare is room for four peepul in this canoe wich I have bought. So you can cum out eevnings with me in the moonlight, & I will paddle softly oer the tide, & you will look into my eyes with rapture & love, like you used to beefoar I got fat, sed Pa.

Not a chanst, sed Ma. If you reely feel, Ma sed, like gitting a few loving glances from me, you can set out on the poarch & I can mance or no romance. I'm not that kind of a girl, Ma sed.

Pleese cum, sed Pa. I bought that littel canoe mostly for you. I hate to think, now I am out my thirty dollars, that you are going to shatter my dreem of luv by staying ashore. I didn't think my wife was a land lubber, sed Pa. Then I will go myself. I will seeze my paddel, sed Pa & glide thru the water like my ancester Hiawatha, wich used to sweep the silvery streem in his birch bark canoe.

So Pa went oaver to the club house & put on a bathing suite & caim back to the beach to go in the canoe. Pa is awful fat in the stummick, & wen all the men and ladies saw him cumming down to his canoe thay beegan for to laff. Ma was laffing the loudest of all.

Ha Ha, sed one of the men, look at the human frate car cumming along the beach. I wonder whare he is going.

I am going out to ride in my canoe, sed Pa. Have you any objeckshuns? Oh, no, sed the man. If the canoe can stand it I ought not to kick, the man sed to Pa. Then Pa went to git in the canoe, & one of the ladies sed Oh, look at that grate big fat man trying to git in that littel bit of a boat. I think it is a shaim!

Then Pa got in the canoe & he beegan to paddel. He went out quite a littel ways & then a wave turned the canoe over & I swam out & turned the canoe over aggenn & got out all the water, & then I toald Pa to hang on to the back end of the canoe & I paddeld him to shoar.

Then a big crowd of peepul got around us & sum newspaper men took my fotograft, & Pa sed to the newspaper men, Put under the picter "Littel Bobbie, aged ten, wich was neer death by drowning but was saved by his heroick father. The father, weekened by hours of battling with the elements, modestly dis-claims any credit, saying that he only did what any man wud do."

Pa is a awful bluffer. He didn't save me at all, I saved him.

A Transatlantic Log

By WEX JONES

I AM flying for London to-morrow. I hope I shall not be seasick, although I have never been in the high air before.

Just think of being twenty-four hours away from land, with no communication but the wireless telephone! I can't imagine what people did before every one carried her own telephone. But twenty-four hours is so long to be away from anywhere in these days. I hope the liner is safe.

It feels funny to be all togged up in hydrogen clothes. Some of the lines are careless about this, but the White Cross insists that everything worn aboard the aeroplane must be lined with hydrogen. It is a wise precaution, too, in case of 'planewreck. Every one seems so much fatter that it's a joke. Thank goodness, I'm naturally so thin that the air-going togs are quite becoming.

The Scootania was delayed four minutes this morning for three ladies who had to wait until the polls opened before casting their votes for Miss Mary Smith for Presidentness. I think they were foolish, because Mary Smith is sure to have a safe lead over Angeline Brown, and Pauline Pickle and John Adams are only outsiders anyway.

The Scootania got away in fine style this morning, being towed up into the high air by two balloons. The captain expects to make a record run if we get no bad weather, and hopes to land us in London in twenty-three hours. Even at that it seems to be a long time to be in air.

About three hours out when my telephone began to tinkle. Mother was quite angry because I had taken the keys of the house with me and no one could get in. I asked the captain to stop the 'plane, but he merely laughed and said, "Let your mother camp on the doorstep till you get back."

The brute!

Saw a New York bound 'plane this morning and hoisted our ensign upside down when no one was looking. The 'plane ran across our course and sent a small kite aboard to see what was wrong. The captain of the Scootania was crazy, but I told him my sister was collector of the port of New York and I would get her to hold up every flyer if he made a kick.

Collided to-night with a flyer bound from Zambesi to Greenland. My hydrogen skirt let me down easily into the water and I was picked up by the Mauretania, which used to be the crack transatlantic liner. But I will be two days on the water, and nothing but the wireless telegraph to keep me in touch with home.

This kind of traveling is not so bad. Every one seems so friendly aboard one of the slow four-day ships. I shall be sorry when the voyage is over.

Engaged to the first officer. I think aeroplanes are both dangerous and dull.
